In the absence of statutory requirement, a lien notice, claim, or statement need not be signed,⁸⁴ although, as considered supra § 156, the claim or statement must disclose on its face by whom the lien is claimed. It is generally required by statute, however, that the notice, claim, statement, or account shall be signed⁸⁵ by claimant⁸⁶ or by some one in his behalf⁸⁷

A signing by the agent⁸⁸ or attorney⁸⁹ of claimant is sufficient. A claim by a firm is sufficiently signed if signed in the individual names of all the partners,⁹⁰ or the name of one of the partners,⁹¹ or if signed with the firm name.⁹² When the notice states the full name of the corporation claiming the lien but is signed by using an abbreviated designation, the notice is sufficient, as no one could be misled or injured.⁹³

Except under statutes requiring that the statement or account be "subscribed,"⁹⁴ it is not necessary that the name of claimant shall be signed at the end of the claim, but it is sufficient if the affidavit or verification is signed⁹⁵ or if the name of claimant appears at the commencement or in the body of the statement.⁹⁶

§ 167. Verification

- a. In general
- b. Persons entitled to verify
- c. Person before whom verification made
- d. Sufficiency of verification

a. In General

The failure to verify a mechanic's lien claim or statement as required by statute ordinarily defeats the lien.

It is usually required by statute that a mechanic's lien claim or statement shall be verified,⁹⁷ and as a rule a lack of verification defeats the lien⁹⁸ although under some statutes it merely postpones the lien as to purchasers and encumbrancers in good faith whose rights accrued after the expiration of the time for filing.⁹⁹

Time to Raise Objection. An objection that the notice or statement of lien is not sufficiently verified can be raised at the trial, and need not be raised any sooner.¹

b. Persons Entitled to Verify

Such person or persons as the statutes designate may verify a mechanic's lien claim or statement.

The verification of a mechanic's lien claim or statement may be made by such person or persons as the statutes designate.² In the absence of a statutory requirement, the verification need not be made by claimant in person,³ but it may be made by other persons,⁴ such as an agent,⁵ attorney,⁶ or bookkeeper⁷ of claimant, whether claimant is a natural person or a corporation⁸ Where the lien is claimed by a corporation, a verification by its president,⁹ secretary,¹⁰ or by a person who has full charge of its business and is substantially its general manager¹¹ is proper; and a verification by a person described as a member of the corporation has been held sufficient¹² One of two or more joint lienors may verify the claim on behalf of all¹³ In case the lien is claimed by a firm, a verification by one of the partners¹⁴ or the manager of the firm¹⁵ is sufficient, while an attempted verification by the firm is invalid¹⁶

Such persons as are designated by statute may take the verification to a mechanic's lien claim or statement

The verification to a mechanic's lien claim or statement may be made before such person as the statutes may designate¹⁷ The oath of verification may be made before any person authorized to administer oaths¹⁸ or take depositions¹⁹

While there is authority to the contrary,²⁰ it has been held that, under a statute requiring the statement to be verified, but silent as to where or before whom such affidavit shall be made, the affidavit may be made in another state before any officer authorized by the laws of such state to administer oaths,²¹ and, except in some jurisdictions,²² it has been held that an affidavit to a mechanic's lien statement sworn to before a notary in another state is sufficient²³ An affidavit of verification showing on its face that it was taken outside the jurisdiction of the notary who administered the oath is invalid²⁴

Where a lien is claimed by partners, one of the partners who is a notary has no right to administer the oath to the other partner who verifies the statement,²⁵ but the verification is not rendered invalid by the fact that it is made before an officer otherwise empowered to administer the oath, who is attorney²⁶ or general manager²⁷ for claimant.

fectual the oath of verification must be in writing as a part of the paper filed for record for the purpose of claiming the lien³⁰ Although it has been held that there must be strict compliance with the statutory requisites with respect to the verification of the statement,³¹ and that, in determining whether an affidavit conforms to the law, it will be strictly construed,³² it has also been held that a verification which is in substantial compliance with the statute is sufficient.³³ The verification need not be in the exact language of the statute,³⁴ or in the exact form prescribed by statute,³⁵ although it is sufficient where it follows the exact language of the statute,³⁶ it is not defeated by a clerical error which is not misleading³⁷ or by frivolous objections to its form or wording³⁸

Various alleged defects or irregularities have been held not to render the verification insufficient³⁹ Some statutes require a verification by affidavit⁴⁰ of particular matters,⁴¹ and under such statutes not only is an affidavit necessary⁴² but it must sufficiently cover the matters specified in the statute.⁴³ Under such statutes,⁴⁴ or under statutes requiring a verification to the effect that the statements contained in the notice are true,⁴⁵ a statement or notice having merely a certificate of acknowledgment is insufficient; but some statutes do not prescribe or require any particular form of verification,⁴⁶ and under such statutes an affidavit is not essential,⁴⁷ and a claim signed by claimant and verified by his oath,⁴⁸ the notary certifying that claimant swore to it,⁴⁹ is sufficient, although even in such case the better practice is to have the verification in the form of an affidavit annexed to the claim to the effect that the facts therein stated are true.⁵⁰

The verification need not be in form like that attached to a pleading,⁵¹ it is sufficient if the entire lien paper is in form an affidavit⁵² It is not necessary that the affidavit of verification should restate the facts on which the claim is based,⁵³ and it is sufficient to state that the claim or statement is true⁵⁴ or that the facts stated therein are true;⁵⁵ but an affidavit of verification certifying merely that a part of the statement is true and not that the whole of it is true has been held insufficient⁵⁶

In New Mexico

(1) Verifications of mechanic's lien claims were held not insufficient because verified only as to part of

than in the statement of claim⁵⁷ Certainty to a common intent is sufficient⁵⁸ One of the rules in testing the sufficiency of an affidavit to a mechanic's lien is whether perjury is assignable on it⁵⁹

Statement of relation of affiant to claimant

Where the verification is made by a person other than claimant, it is perhaps usual to state the relation which affiant bears to claimant,⁶⁰ but, unless so required by statute,⁶¹ it is not necessary that the affidavit of verification shall state that affiant is the agent of claimant⁶² or that he makes the verification in behalf of claimant⁶³

(2) Showing of Knowledge or Information and Belief

Where required by the statute, the verification to a mechanic's lien claim or statement must be based on the affiant's knowledge of the facts stated

Under some statutes a verification on information and belief is permissible⁶⁴ Under other statutes the verification must be based on affiant's knowledge of the facts stated and is insufficient if it appears to be based on information or belief,⁶⁵ although affiant's knowledge of the facts need not be affirmed⁶⁶ where he is one of the persons claiming the lien,⁶⁷ and where the verification is sufficient in form, and affiant swears that he knows the facts alleged in the notice or statement to be true, the lien is not defeated by the fact that he may not have personal knowledge of the facts so alleged⁶⁸

(3) Signature

The fact that the affidavit of verification to a mechanic's lien claim or statement is not signed by the affiant does not, according to some authorities, invalidate the claim or statement.

The fact that the affidavit of verification is not signed by affiant has been held not to invalidate the statement if it can be proved that it was in fact sworn to,⁶⁹ but there is also authority to the contrary⁷⁰ In particular cases the signing of the verification by affiant has been held sufficient.⁷¹

(4) Jurat

The authorities are in disagreement as to the effect of the omission of, or defects in, a jurat to the verification of a mechanic's lien claim or statement.

It has been held that the absence of the jurat is not fatal to the verification of a mechanic's lien claim or statement,⁷² and that it may be shown by extraneous evidence that the affidavit signed by claimant or some authorized person for him was in fact sworn to,⁷³ but in other jurisdictions a statement without any jurat has been held fatally defective although it was in fact sworn to⁷⁴ In some statements, where averments of lien statements as to name of property owner against which liens were claimed, description of property, and itemized statement attached were specifically verified—Hot Springs Plumbing & Heating Co v Wallace, 27 P 2d 984, 38 NM 3

(3) It has been held, however, that a verification covering some, but not all, of the elements of the statement of the claim is insufficient—Minor v. Marshall, 27 P 481, 6 NM 194

jurisdictions the failure of the officer to sign the jurat has been held not fatal,⁷⁵ but in other jurisdictions it has been held that the verification is insufficient where the jurat is not signed by the officer before whom the oath was made,⁷⁶ although his seal is upon it,⁷⁷ and the defect cannot be supplied by proof aliunde⁷⁸

In some jurisdictions the verification is insufficient where the signature of the officer is not authenticated by his official seal⁷⁹ or other certificate of authority,⁸⁰ and proof aliunde that the claim was sworn to is not permissible,⁸¹ but in other jurisdictions the failure of the officer administering the oath to impress his official seal on the lien claim or notice before recording cannot be urged to defeat the lien, at least by any one other than a subsequent innocent purchaser who relied on the record.⁸² The word "seal" written after the notary's name in a copy of the notice set out in the record indicates that the seal was properly attached to the original, even though the copy does not bear the impression of the seal itself.⁸³

Where the statement is filed in the office of the person administering the oath, the omission of his seal,⁸⁴ or his failure to give the title of his office⁸⁵ or his full official title,⁸⁶ does not invalidate the lien

Statement of expiration of commission Failure of a notary to add after his official signature the date of the expiration of his commission does not render the lien void.⁸⁷

Venue The failure of the notary to state in the jurat the county in which he is a notary has been held not to be fatal.⁸⁸

cisions on the question, can be easily corrected,⁹⁴ but an intentional false statement of a material matter will vitiate the claim.⁹⁵ Rules substantially to this effect are expressly embodied in some statutes.⁹⁶ A claim or statement which does not even substantially comply with the statutory requirements is fatally defective in a majority of jurisdictions, as considered supra § 150, and in such case relief against the defect is beyond the remedial powers of a court of equity;⁹⁷ and it is immaterial to whose fault the insufficiency is attributable⁹⁸ unless it is that of the party sought to be charged.⁹⁹ The fact that the owner himself bought the materials and promised to pay for them furnishes no reason for sustaining a defective claim.¹ Any person interested may take advantage of a defect in the lien claim.²

Errors in unnecessary recitals. Errors in respect of matters not required to be included in the statement of lien will not invalidate the statement³ or defeat the lien.⁴ This is especially true as affecting the rights of the original parties to the contract.⁵

Mistake as to date. Although there is authority to the contrary,⁶ it has generally been held that a mistake or inaccuracy in the statement as to a date is not necessarily fatal where no one is misled thereby to his prejudice,⁷ and that such mistake does not preclude claimant, when necessary to sustain his lien, from showing the true date.⁸

or at the time when it is offered in evidence to establish the lien,¹² and going to trial on the merits.¹³

In addition, the owner waives his right to object to a defect or inaccuracy in the claim by obtaining a rule on claimant to issue a scire facias on the lien,¹⁴ entering into an agreement with claimant that the issuance of a scire facias shall be postponed for a specified period of time,¹⁵ joining in an agreed statement of facts, setting forth that he was not misled by an inaccuracy in the certificate of claim,¹⁶ or by failing to request a more specific statement of claim after leave was granted to amend the claim but it was not formally amended.¹⁷ After giving security and having the lien discharged, it is too late for the owner,¹⁸ although not for other lienors,¹⁹ to raise objections to defects in the lien. On the other hand, the mere appearance of defendants in proceedings to foreclose a lien does not waive a defect in the notice,²⁰ and it has been held that the owner does not by merely reading the claim as filed to the jury on the trial admit it²¹ or become estopped to allege that it is defective.²² Where the lien claim or statement is fatally defective, the fact that a purchaser, subsequent lien creditor, or other person interested in the estate has actual notice of the claim will not cure the defect as against him.²³

§ 170. Amendment of Claim or Statement

- a. In general
- b. Time and nature of amendment
- c. Procedure

a. In General

A mechanic's lien claim or statement may be amended pursuant to statutory authorization.

It has been laid down flatly that the notice or claim of a mechanic's lien must be complete in itself at the time when it is filed for record in order to authorize its enforcement, and that it is not capable of being amended or reformed,²⁴ but it has also been held that, at least in certain respects or within a specified time, the claim, notice, or statement may be amended.²⁵ In various jurisdictions there are statutes expressly providing for the amendment of the claim or statement.²⁶ Some filed its claim, and acknowledging that claim was filed in behalf of plaintiff, waived any technical question of sufficiency of claim of lien—Donkle & Webber Lumber Co v Rehmann, 33 NE2d 709, 310 Ill App 17.

statutes provide that the claim may be amended as pleadings may be,²⁷ but a statute providing for amendment of process, pleadings, or proceedings in actions to enforce liens does not apply to the statement of lien.²⁸ A statute relating to the amendment of mechanics' lien claims does not permit an individual to take advantage of a lien previously filed by a non-entity.²⁹

b. Time and Nature of Amendment

- (1) In general
- (2) Particular matters

(1) In General

Unless authorized by statute, a mechanic's lien claim or statement may not be amended after the expiration of the time for filing.

A mechanic's lien claim or statement may be amended prior to the expiration of the time for filing,³⁰ but, in the absence of statutory authority, an amendment is not permissible after the lapse of such time.³¹ In various jurisdictions statutes confer authority for the making of the amendment after the expiration of the time for filing.³² Under the terms of the different statutes, and the construction placed thereon, it has been variously held that an amendment may be made after the institution of suit to enforce the claim,³³ at any time when a pleading could be amended,³⁴ on the trial,³⁵ at the close of the evidence,³⁶ after trial and verdict,³⁷ at any time before the entry of judgment,³⁸ and even after judgment.³⁹ While the practice of moving for an amendment in an answer to a rule to strike off is not to be commended,⁴⁰ it seems that an amendment may be allowed after a rule to strike off where it is merely an amplification or correction of the original averment and does not alter the character of the claim.⁴¹

An amendment may be permitted where the lien claim is not fatally defective,⁴² as where it is defective in form⁴³ and not in substance⁴⁴. In a few jurisdictions the statutes expressly provide for amendments in matters of substance,⁴⁵ but in most jurisdictions an amendment is not allowable after the expiration of the time allowed for filing the claim where the claim filed is defective in substance,⁴⁶ or where it is fatally or incurably defective,⁴⁷ or for some other reason the amendment sought would be in effect the filing of a new claim⁴⁸. Where the lien was discharged for failure to issue a summons within the time prescribed by statute, the court is without power to amend the claim where the amendment would result in reviving the claim⁴⁹.

The courts will not permit an amendment after the time allowed for filing so as to affect the rights of a bona fide purchaser or encumbrancer;⁵⁰ but this rule does not apply so as to give a prior mortgagee,⁵¹ a purchaser at a judicial sale,⁵² or a purchaser who has paid only a small part of the purchase price⁵³ a standing to object to the amendment.

Sometimes defendant's consent to the amendment of the complaint obviates the necessity of amending the claim or notice,⁵⁴ and it is proper to refuse leave to amend where the amendment, if made, would be useless⁵⁵.

(2) Particular Matters

Various amendments have been allowed to a mechanic's lien claim or statement, such as an amendment for the purpose of correcting an erroneous or imperfect description of the property or an error or inaccuracy in the statement of the name of the owner.

Amendments to mechanics' lien claims or statements have been permitted to make the claim more precise, specific, and particular,⁵⁶ to apportion the claim,⁵⁷ to change⁵⁸ or supply⁵⁹ a date, to supply an omission to aver notice to the owner of the intention to file the lien,⁶⁰ and to set out more fully the terms and conditions of a verbal contract⁶¹. In addition, an amendment may be allowed for the purpose of correcting an erroneous or imperfect description of the property,⁶² but not for the purpose of describing and charging property entirely different from that described in the claim as originally filed⁶³.

Except under some statutes,⁶⁴ amendments to the claim introducing new parties cannot be made, at least after the expiration of the statutory period for filing a lien,⁶⁵ but a name improperly appearing may be struck out,⁶⁶ and amendments may be made for the purpose of correcting an error or inaccuracy in the statement of the name of the owner⁶⁷ or lienor,⁶⁸ to cure an omission to show with whom the original contract was made,⁶⁹ and to change the designated status or capacity of a person named in the original claim⁷⁰

Amendment of verification In some jurisdictions an unverified mechanic's lien statement may be amended by adding thereto a proper verification,⁷¹ even after the expiration of the statutory period allowed for the filing of the lien statement,⁷² but in other jurisdictions the want of verification, or of a sufficient verification, is a defect which cannot be amended, at least after the expiration of the period of time in which the claim is required to be filed⁷³

Amount of claim A claim or statement may not be amended as to the amount claimed where the statute expressly excepts the amount claimed from the matters in respect of which the claim or statement may be amended⁷⁴

c. Procedure

In amending a mechanic's lien claim or statement, the procedure prescribed by statute must be followed.

made in the trial court, by leave or order of court,⁷⁸ an amendment by changing or altering the record is not permissible,⁷⁹ although it is sometimes upheld notwithstanding the irregularity⁸⁰ Under some statutes the amendment must be in writing⁸¹ and signed by the judge⁸² In some jurisdictions the amended lien claim need not be sworn to,⁸³ but in other jurisdictions the amendment should be sworn to by claimant unless some reason is assigned for submitting the affidavit of another person⁸⁴

Defendant may deny the existence of the alleged grounds of amendment,⁸⁵ and, where he does so, claimant has the burden of supporting his motion or petition by proof⁸⁶ It has been held that the burden of showing that a purchaser or encumbrancer would not be prejudiced by the amendment is on claimant;⁸⁷ but it has also been held that, where the record is silent on the subject of intervening rights, claimant is not required to negative such rights⁸⁸

Notice. Such notice of the application to amend a lien claim or statement must be given as the statute may prescribe⁸⁹ On failure to give the required notice the application may be denied without prejudice to renew on proper notice⁹⁰

§ 171. Striking Off Claim or Statement

In a proper case a mechanic's lien claim, notice, or statement may be canceled, discharged, or stricken off.

In a proper case a mechanic's lien claim, notice, or statement may be discharged or canceled.⁹¹ Where the grounds for cancellation of a notice of lien are prescribed by statute, the notice may not be canceled on other grounds⁹² A statute authorizing the court to cancel a mechanic's lien on the ground that no action to enforce it had been commenced within the prescribed time after service of a notice to commence an action is not a statute of limitation making it compulsory for the court to discharge the lien, but is rather a permissive statute which clothes the court with discretionary power to discharge or to refuse to do so for good reason shown⁹³

Where the modes of discharging a mechanic's lien are prescribed by statute it may be discharged only in one of the modes provided⁹⁴ Where separate and distinct statutory provisions govern the discharge of a mechanic's lien and the discharge of a mechanic's notice of intention, a mechanic's notice of intention may be discharged only by pursuing the method prescribed therefor by statute⁹⁵ and the remedies provided for discharge of the lien do

Contract against liens not being part of original contract between owner and contractor, and hence not disclosed by the record of the lien, is not ground for striking off the lien.—Hudak v Falasa, 13 Pa. Dist. & Co. 485—Pennsylvania Supply Co v Lumb, Pa. Com. Pl., 52 Dauph. Co. 29

Defective notice of intention to file a lien is not ground for striking off the lien.—Hudak v Falasa, 13 Pa. Dist. & Co. 485—Pennsylvania Supply Co v Lumb, Pa. Com. Pl., 52 Dauph. Co. 29—40 C.J. p. 256 note 98 [d]

Questions of fact generally

Court will decline to strike off a mechanic's lien where it is appar-

contains at least one good item,⁸ but the court may strike out items which are improperly included.⁹ A lien claim which sets forth all the facts required by the statute cannot be stricken off because additional facts are not set forth.¹⁰ Under express statutory provisions the failure of claimant to serve a notice on the owner of the fact of the filing of the claim, or to have service accepted or to file an affidavit setting forth the fact and manner of the service of the notice of filing, is sufficient ground for striking off the claim.¹¹

Effect of discharge Where a materialman furnishes materials to a contractor, the discharge of the lien because of the improper inclusion of a false item may release the building owner but it does not release the contractor from his obligation to pay the indebtedness.¹²

IV. OPERATION AND EFFECT OF LIEN

A. AMOUNT SECURED

§ 172. In General

As a general and broadly stated rule subject to exceptions, the measure and limit of a mechanic's lien is the full amount due and unpaid for the work and materials furnished.

As a general and broadly stated rule, subject to various exceptions as discussed infra this section and §§ 173-176, the measure and limit of a mechanic's lien is the full amount due and unpaid for the work and materials furnished.¹³ A lien cannot be enforced for labor and material not included in, or for an amount greater than that stated in, the notice, claim, or statement which has been filed pursuant to statute,¹⁴ except for incidentals to the claim, such as interest discussed infra § 176, but there is authority which holds that where a statute provides that failure to file the statement shall not defeat the lien except as against purchasers and encumbrancers, the amount claimed in the statement does not limit the recovery against the owner.¹⁵

In accordance with constitutional or statutory provisions, the amount of debt for which the lien may be enforced is fixed as of the date the lien attaches.¹⁶

§ 173. Value of Labor and Materials

In the absence of a special contract fixing the price of the services or materials, the measure and limit of the amount of the mechanic's lien is the reasonable value of what was done or furnished

Where the price of the services or materials has been fixed by a contract between the lienor and the owner, the reasonable value of the services or materials is not the measure of the amount of the lien,¹⁷ but, in the absence of a special contract fixing the price of the services or materials, the measure and limit of the amount of the lien is the reasonable value of what was done or furnished¹⁸ Under statutes conforming strictly to the direct lien or Pennsylvania system, discussed supra § 105, the lien of a person other than the principal contractor is limited to the reasonable value of what was done and furnished,¹⁹ regardless of the price agreed on between claimant and the contractor, as discussed infra § 174 b; but, where a price has been agreed on by contract, such agreed value is sometimes deemed to be, at least prima facie, the value or reasonable value.²⁰ A similar rule which has been applied is that, where a person performs labor or furnishes material at the direction of the purchaser of premises under a contract of sale, without dealing directly with the vendor, he cannot enforce a lien against the vendor's interest in the premises for more than the reasonable value of the labor or materials²¹

use of materials ordered by another to improve the property, the lien attaches for the value of the materials used.²²

§ 174. Amount Fixed or Due under Contract or Subcontract

- a. Persons contracting directly with owner
- b. Persons not contracting directly with owner

a. Persons Contracting Directly with Owner

Generally the amount of the lien of a claimant who has furnished labor or materials for an agreed price under a contract made by him directly with the owner is measured and limited by the price fixed in the contract.

Generally, unless deductions are to be made by reason of payments made or lack of complete performance, the amount of the lien of a claimant who has furnished labor or materials for an agreed price under a contract made by him directly with the owner is measured and limited by the price fixed in the contract.²³ A contractor may have a lien for extras furnished where the contract provides that if extras are furnished an additional charge therefor may be made.²⁴ Where the contract has been rescinded, the amount of the lien is not limited to the contract price.²⁵ A mechanic's lien may not be extended to include charges for attorney's fees provided for by notes given for materials where the lien has matured before the notes

Filing lien before completion of contract. b. Persons Not Contracting Directly with Owner

- (1) Amount fixed in, or due under, principal contract
- (2) Amount fixed in, or due under, subcontract

(1) Amount Fixed in, or Due under, Principal Contract

- (a) In general
- (b) Effect of payments or guarantees

(a) In General

Under some statutes subcontractors, materialmen, and other persons not contracting directly with the owner may enforce liens for the full amount due them regardless of the contract price agreed on between the owner and the contractor, but under other statutes the contract price agreed on between the owner and the contractor fixes the limit of the amount for which they can enforce their liens.

In accordance with some statutory provisions subcontractors, materialmen, and other persons not contracting directly with the owner may enforce liens for the full amount due them, regardless of the contract price agreed on between the owner and the contractor²⁸ Under other statutes the contract price agreed on between the owner and the contractor fixes the limit of the amount for which subcontractors, materialmen, and other persons not contracting directly with the owner may enforce their liens,²⁹ provided the owner has not made improper payments, as discussed infra subdivision b (1) (b) of this section, and, where the liens of such persons exceed in the aggregate the contract price, claimants share pro rata in the fund,³⁰ subject, of course, to such priorities among themselves as may have been acquired by superior diligence and the like, as discussed infra § 198 Where the ostensible contract price is more than the real contract price, such ostensible price is to be taken as the contract price as far as a lien claimant other than the contractor is concerned,³¹ at least where he relied on the price stated in the written contract,³² although not where he was not deceived.³³

Notwithstanding the rule prevailing in many jurisdictions that the liens of persons not contracting directly with the owner cannot exceed the price fixed in the contract between the owner and the principal contract, the owner may become liable for more than the original price by a failure to follow the law as to the rights of subcontractors³⁴ or to comply with the provisions of the statutes which place a limitation on his liability.³⁵ The limitation does not apply under some statutes where the contract between the owner and the contractor is not in writing,³⁶ does not set forth certain prescribed matters,³⁷ or the contract, or contract and bond provided for by statute, are not filed or recorded, as discussed supra § 82 and infra § 257. The liens of persons other than the contractor are not confined to the price fixed in the principal contract where an unreasonably low price is fixed in such contract for the purpose of defrauding subcontractors and others.³⁸

Extra work The value of extra work performed or materials furnished by the contractor in connection with the original contract, and for which the owner is liable to him, is properly taken into account in determining the amount secured by the liens of subcontractor and other persons not contracting directly with the owner,³⁹ but the rule is otherwise where the performance of the extra work or the furnishing of the extra materials is a separate and distinct transaction outside of, and apart from, the original contract.⁴⁰

(b) Effect of Payments or Guarantees

In some jurisdictions subcontractors or other claimants not contracting directly with the owner may enforce their liens up to the limit of the price fixed in the contract between the owner and the contractor irrespective of amounts paid under the contract, but in other jurisdictions the enforcement of their liens is limited to the portion of the contract price which remains due and unpaid.

In some jurisdictions the price fixed in the contract between the owner and the contractor is the only limitation on the amount of the liens of subcontractors and other claimants not contracting directly with the owner,⁴¹ and within, and up to such limit, their liens may be enforced for the proper amounts,⁴² irrespective of the amount due and unpaid under the principal contract,⁴³ and payments made by the owner to the contractor do not defeat or reduce the liens of subcontractors, laborers, or materialmen, as discussed infra § 251. In other jurisdictions, notably those in which the system of liens by subrogation to the rights of the contractor obtains to its full extent, effect is given to payments which have been made to the contractor, as discussed infra § 251, and the liens of subcontractors, materialmen or other persons not contracting directly with the owner are limited not only to the price fixed in the contract between the owner and the contractor, as discussed supra subdivision b (1) (a) of this section, but also to that portion thereof which remains due and unpaid⁴⁴ at the time they commence work,⁴⁵ give notice of their intention to claim liens,⁴⁶ or file their lien claims,⁴⁷ or which may become due thereafter,⁴⁸ and the claimants share pro rata in the amount remaining⁴⁹ Where the amount due and unpaid is greater than the amount of the liens, the liens must be allowed in full⁵⁰

The rule that the amount of the liens of subcontractors shall not exceed in the aggregate the amount due the contractor at the date of filing notices of liens does not apply where the contract between the owner and contractor provides for payment, not of a gross sum, but according to the character and quantity of work and materials⁵¹ However, where a contractor elects to take a note and mortgage in part payment of the purchase price, in accordance with an option of his contract, a subcontractor is entitled to a lien only to the extent of the balance of the purchase money due in cash⁵² The owner may become liable for more than the original contract price by failing to observe his original contract as to the times of payment⁵³ Liens are not limited to the amount due a certain person as contractor where he does not occupy the status of a contractor⁵⁴ Also interest on the indebtedness of the owner after maturity until paid is available to subcontractors, materialmen, and laborers, as well as the principal sum⁵⁵ A contractor's claim against the owner for damages is not available to increase the amount for which subcontractors and others can enforce a lien⁵⁶

Under some statutes the owner must withhold a certain per cent of the contract price to secure payment of mechanics, and persons employed by the contractor may be given a lien for that amount even though the contractor has been paid in full⁵⁷

Guarantee of payment Where the owner has guaranteed payment to a subcontractor or materialman, the amount of other mechanics' liens filed thereafter may not exceed the difference between the amount due the contractor under the terms of the contract and the amount of the guaranteed payment⁵⁸

(2) Amount Fixed in, or Due under, Subcontract

Under some statutes a subcontractor, materialman, or other person claiming under a contract with the contractor is entitled to enforce a lien up to, and only up to, the amount fixed by such contract, but under other statutes the price fixed in the contract between the claimant and the contractor is not controlling in fixing the amount of the lien.

Under some statutes a claimant who is a subcontractor, materialman, or other person claiming under a contract with the contractor is entitled to enforce a lien up to, and only up to, the amount fixed by such contract,⁵⁹ or the amount for which the contractor is liable,⁶⁰ subject to the limitations obtaining under many statutes that such person cannot enforce a lien for more than the original contract price agreed on between the owner and the contractor or such portion thereof as remains due and unpaid to the contractor, as discussed supra subdivision b (1) of this section However, in jurisdictions where the measure and extent of the amount of the lien of a claimant other than the original contractor is the value or reasonable value of the labor or material furnished, the price fixed in the contract between claimant and the contractor is not controlling in fixing the amount of the lien,⁶¹ although such contract price is sometimes deemed to be, at least prima facie, the value or reasonable value within the meaning of the rule obtaining in such jurisdictions, as stated supra § 173 Extra material furnished by a subcontractor on the contractor's assurance of payment must be considered for the purpose of the lien without reference to the limits of the subcontract⁶²

Persons employed by, or contracting with, subcontractor In accordance with the provisions of some statutes, persons employed by, or contracting with, a subcontractor cannot enforce liens in excess of the amount due the subcontractor under his contract with the contractor,⁶³ but under other statutes they may do so.⁶⁴ A statute which limits the lien for materials to the amount of the owner's contract with the contractor does not limit the lien of a person supplying a subcontractor to the amount of the contract between the contractor and the subcontractor.⁶⁵

§ 175. Abandonment or Part Performance of Contract

- a Substantial performance
- b Abandonment by contractor

a. Substantial Performance

Where there has been a substantial, but not full, performance of his contract by the claimant, the measure of his lien is generally held to be the contract price less such deductions as should be made because of the errors or omissions in doing the work.

Where there has been a substantial, but not full, performance of his contract by claimant, and he has acted in good faith, he is entitled to a lien, as discussed supra § 95, the measure of which is generally held to be the contract price less such deductions as should be made because of the errors or omissions in doing the work,⁶⁶ and, in such case, the wrongful refusal of the owner to allow the contractor to complete performance does not remit the contractor to a recovery of the reasonable value of the labor performed and materials furnished.⁶⁷ A like rule is applied in determining the limit of the liens of other claimants who are merely subrogated to the rights of the contractor.⁶⁸ However, in a few cases the lien of the contractor has been measured by the reasonable value of the work performed and materials furnished,⁶⁹ and it has also been held that the owner is liable to subcontractors and other persons not contracting directly with him to the extent of the reasonable value of the improvement to him.⁷⁰

b. Abandonment by Contractor

- (1) Lien of contractor
- (2) Liens of persons other than contractor

(1) Lien of Contractor

Where the lien claimant has justifiably abandoned full performance of his contract, he is generally held entitled to a lien for the reasonable value of the work and materials furnished in proportion to the price stipulated for the whole, but he is sometimes allowed a lien for the unpaid balance of the contract price less the cost of completing the work according to the contract.

Where the lien claimant has justifiably abandoned full performance of his contract, he is generally held entitled to a lien for the reasonable value of the work and materials furnished⁷¹ in proportion to the price stipulated for the whole.⁷² Sometimes, however, he is allowed a lien for the unpaid balance of the contract price less the cost of completing the work according to the contract,⁷³ particularly where the contract expressly so provides,⁷⁴ or where the owner has completed the

The amount of the lien of one who has furnished labor at the request of a contractor in the construction of a building cannot exceed the amount due or to become due to the contractor from the owner, and hence any offset against the contractor for failure to perform his contract with the owner is available to the owner in arriving at the amount so due or to become due.—King v. Hoadley, 26 A.2d 103, 113 Vt. 394

Work held not defective

Reconstruction

Contract that, if house were not completed as contracted, mechanic's lien existed for contract price, less cost to complete, was held to imply additional work and material, not complete reconstruction.—Sloan Lumber Co. v. Davis, Tex. Civ. App., 19 S.W.2d 355, error refused building under a provision of the contract authorizing him, on default of the contractor, to do so and to deduct the cost of doing so from the unpaid balance on the contract.⁷⁵ Where the contract was abandoned by mutual consent with the amount due agreed on, a lien may be had for such amount.⁷⁶ Architects, who were to supervise the construction of a building, but were wrongfully discharged before the building was completed, are not entitled to a lien for an amount based on the cost of the building when completed.⁷⁷

(2) Liens of Persons Other than Contractor.

In a number of jurisdictions, where the contractor has abandoned the contract before full performance, the aggregate claims of subcontractors and other claimants not contracting directly with the owner cannot extend beyond the contract price or the amount due and unpaid on the contract. The unpaid balance of the contract price is subject to deductions for the cost of completing the building or for damages sustained by the owner because of the contractor's default.

As in other cases falling within general rules obtaining in certain jurisdictions, considered supra § 174, where the contractor has abandoned the contract before full performance, the aggregate liens of subcontractors and other claimants not contracting directly with the owner cannot extend beyond the amount named in the contract between the owner and the contractor⁷⁸ or the amount due and unpaid the contractor under the terms of the contract⁷⁹ at the time of filing of the lien or service of notice on the owner.⁸⁰ Unless performance of the contract is completed by the assignee or sureties of the contractor,⁸¹ where the contractor has abandoned the contract the unpaid balance of the contract price out of which the claims of the subcontractors and other claimants would be payable is subject to deductions for the cost of completing the building⁸² or for damages sustained by the owner because of the contractor's default,⁸³ and after all deductions have been computed the amount of the contract price remaining in the owner's hands is to be distributed among the mechanics' lien claimants according to the amount and standing of their several claims.⁸⁴ This rule is particularly applicable where the contract gives the owner the right, in case of the contractor's abandonment or failure to prosecute the work vigorously, to complete the building himself and deduct the cost from the contract price.⁸⁵ Another rule which has been applied in some cases is to limit the liens of subcontractors to what the work and materials are reasonably worth, according to the contract price, less payments lawfully made to the contractor and damages sustained by the owner by reason of the abandonment.⁸⁶ Still another rule is to allow each subcontractor, materialman, etc., a lien for such proportion of the amount of his claim as the contract price bears to the entire, actual cost of constructing the building according to the original contract.⁸⁷

Extras not included in the contract are not chargeable against the unpaid balance subject to mechanics' liens.⁸⁸

Nonfulfillment of guaranty The fact that the completed work does not fulfill a guaranty by the contractor has been held not to restrict the right of a laborer to a lien for his wages.⁸⁹

Services or materials furnished after abandonment of contract Subcontractors are not limited by the general contract in the enforcement of liens for services or materials furnished after abandonment of the contract by the general contractor,⁹⁰ and where a subcontractor completes his work on the assurance of payment by the owner he is entitled to a lien for full payment for work performed after the abandonment of the contract.⁹¹

§ 176. Interest

a In general

b Date from which computed

a. In General

The lien may include interest on the amount of the claim where the amount is fixed and certain or is capable of being ascertained and made certain.

The lien may include interest on the amount of the claim⁹² where the amount is fixed and certain⁹³ or is capable of being ascertained and made certain by computation⁹⁴ or reference to market rates,⁹⁵ provided, in case claimant has furnished materials to a contractor, he is entitled to interest on the account as against the contractor,⁹⁶ the fund which the owner should have retained to satisfy liens for materials is sufficient to pay the account with interest,⁹⁷ and the rights of third persons will not be injuriously affected.⁹⁸ The fact that the lien will be enforced against a person other than the one who made the contract with claimant,⁹⁹ such as another owner acting with the one who made the contract¹ or a person claiming under an instrument executed, after the lien attached, by the owner who made the contract,² does not preclude the allowance of interest. On the other hand, interest is properly disallowed under the circumstances of some cases,³ as where the owner was ready and willing at all times to pay the full amount owing by him and the delay in payment was through no fault of his,⁴ or the lienor claims a substantial amount more than is due⁵ unless the amount is readily ascertainable and the debtor makes no offer to pay the amount due.⁶

An unliquidated demand does not draw interest.⁷

until the amount is ascertained and fixed⁸ by judgment⁹ Interest is not allowable on the amount of noninterest-bearing notes accepted by claimant in settlement of certain payments¹⁰ In some jurisdictions the allowance or disallowance of interest rests in the discretion of the court¹¹ Where the mechanics' lien statute provides for interest, the right to interest on a mechanics' lien demand is controlled by that statute, rather than by the general statute pertaining to interest on unpaid claims¹²

Where the interest has once begun to run it continues to run during the time the suit to enforce the lien is under consideration by the court¹³

Rate In the absence of a contract otherwise providing, interest is properly computed at the legal rate¹⁴ A higher rate of interest than the legal rate may not be allowed where agreed on by the contractor and claimant after the services or materials have been furnished¹⁵ A rate in excess of that fixed by contract is not recoverable¹⁶

low interest from a date prior to the time when the contract was made,²⁸ and where the complaint for foreclosure of the lien asks for interest only from the date of filing the lien notice, it has been held to be error to allow interest prior to the filing of the

An allowance of interest from the date the claim was due covers all proper allowances for delay in payment, and the allowance of an additional sum for vexatious delay in payment is improper³⁰

B DURATION

§ 177. Accrual or Commencement

In most jurisdictions a mechanic's lien may exist on a date prior to the filing or recording of the claim, and on the taking of the proper statutory steps to perfect the lien it relates back to such prior date; but in some jurisdictions the lien dates from the time when the claim or notice is filed.

In some jurisdictions a mechanic's lien originates on,³¹ and dates from,³² the time when the claim or notice of lien is filed or recorded, and does not relate back³³ In a majority of jurisdictions, however, the lien, or at least the right thereto, may exist on a date prior to the filing or recording of the claim,³⁴ and on the taking of the proper statutory steps to perfect the lien it relates back to such prior date³⁵ The attaching of the lien is not postponed until the commencement of an action or proceeding to enforce it,³⁶ for the institution of the action does not create the lien³⁷ but merely perpetuates it and keeps it intact, as discussed infra § 183, and where it is once established by judgment it relates back³⁸

Under a few statutes the lien dates only from the recording of the notice of the lien as against third persons, such as purchasers and creditors, without notice,³⁹ but it is effective from an earlier date as against purchasers and creditors with notice⁴⁰ as well as against the owner,⁴¹ and any purchaser or creditor whose interest arises or is created while the construction or repair work is in progress is deemed to be a purchaser or creditor with notice⁴² The lien does not, of course, relate back to a date earlier than that contemplated by the statutes of the particular jurisdiction⁴³ In jurisdictions where the statutes do not expressly fix the time when the lien accrues or commences, the rules obtaining are arrived at by construction.⁴⁴

Land acquired after commencement of construction Under a statute which limits the right to a mechanic's lien to cases where the person causing the work to be done is the owner of the land, mechanics' liens on land which has been purchased after construction of the building has been commenced relate back only to the time when the building owner acquired a lienable interest therein,⁴⁶ and so mechanics' liens for work on a building at the instance of the purchaser under a contract of sale without the vendor's consent do not attach until delivery of the deed to the purchaser.⁴⁷

Retention of title by materialman Where a statute provides that a mechanic's lien shall not attach where the materialman retains title, a mechanic's lien may attach when the materialman waives his right to reclaim the property⁴⁸ by claiming a lien⁴⁹

§ 178. — On Making or Recording of Contract

Under the statutes of some jurisdictions the lien may attach at, or relate back to, the time when the contract was made.

Under the statutes of some,⁵⁰ but not all,⁵¹ jurisdictions the lien may attach at, or relate back to, the time when the contract was made Under the former statutes of a few jurisdictions the lien attached at the time when the contract for the improvement was recorded⁵²

§ 179. — On Commencement of Building or Improvement

- a In general
- b What constitutes

a. In General

In a number of jurisdictions the lien may relate back to, and attach as of the date of, the commencement of the building or improvement.

In a number of jurisdictions, the lien may relate back to, and attach as of the date of, the commencement of the building or improvement,⁵³ at least if the materials are furnished or the labor performed under a general contract,⁵⁴ regardless of the time when the particular work or material on account of which the lien is claimed was actually done or furnished⁵⁵ This rule does not obtain in some jurisdictions,⁵⁶ and when it does obtain it does not apply where a building or improvement is commenced under one contract and work or materials are subsequently contracted to be furnished and are furnished under a separate and independent contract not embraced or provided for in the original agreement.⁵⁷

The commencement of the building or improvement within the meaning of mechanics' liens statutes is the visible commencement of actual operations on the ground for the erection of the building.

The commencement of the building or improvement within the meaning of mechanics' liens statutes is the visible commencement of actual operations on the ground for the erection of the building,⁵⁸ the doing of some work or labor on the ground,⁵⁹ such as beginning to excavate for the foundation⁶⁰ or the basement or cellar,⁶¹ walling the cellar,⁶² or work of a like description, which every one can readily see and recognize as the commencement of a building,⁶³ and which is done with the intention and purpose then formed to continue the work until the completion of the building⁶⁴

On the other hand, work which, although it may improve the property, is merely preparatory to building operations at some future time, and does not of itself tend to contribute directly to the erection, such as clearing,⁶⁵ leveling,⁶⁶ filling up,⁶⁷ or fencing⁶⁸ the property, or tearing down a brick wall left standing after a fire,⁶⁹ does not constitute a commencement for the purpose of fixing the time to which the lien relates, especially when done without any present intention of building⁷⁰ Also staking out the plan of the building⁷¹ or the line of foundations,⁷² or staking the boundary line of the tract,⁷³ preparing material by marking it ready to be worked up into window frames,⁷⁴ or placing lumber⁷⁵ or other materials⁷⁶ on the premises does not constitute a commencement of the building within the meaning of the lien statutes

§ 180. — Interruption of Work or Change of Plans

A temporary cessation of work does not prevent the lien from relating back to the time of the original commencement where there has been no change of design and no evidence of an intention to abandon prosecution of the work.

A temporary cessation of work, where the design of building is not abandoned and work is subsequently resumed and prosecuted without any substantial change in the design, will not prevent the relation back of liens to the time of the original commencement⁷⁷ However, the work of construction must be carried on with such diligence as to show that the original intention to build has not been abandoned,⁷⁸ where the project is abandoned and work is afterward resumed under a new contract between different parties, a mechanic's lien cannot relate back to the time when the building was originally commenced,⁷⁹ but relates back only to the time of the recommencement.⁸⁰ Some courts have held that, when the plan of the building is changed and greatly enlarged while it is in the course of erection, the liens of mechanics and materialmen subsequent to such change relate only to the commencement of the alteration on the ground.⁸¹ Other courts have held that alterations in the original plans and specifications for the building cannot be effectual to deprive a person who furnishes the labor and material for such alterations of the benefits of his lien dating from the commencement of the building,⁸² provided such alterations do not change the design and purpose of the building so that the whole, when finished, is substantially a different building from the one first commenced.⁸³

§ 181. — On Performance of Labor or Furnishing of Material

Depending on the provisions of the statutes, a lien for labor attaches at, or relates back to, the time of the performance of the work or the time when claimant commenced performance of the work, or a lien for materials arises at, or relates back to, the time of the furnishing of the materials or the time when claimant commenced to furnish materials.

Depending on the provisions of the statutes, a lien for labor attaches at, or relates back to, the time of the performance of the work⁸⁴ or the time when claimant commenced performance of the work,⁸⁵ and a lien for materials arises at, or relates back to, the time of the furnishing of the materials⁸⁶ or the time when claimant commenced to furnish materials⁸⁷. The lien may exist prior to the completion of the contract,⁸⁸ and where a subcontractor has performed his work, and a sum greater than the value thereof has already been earned by the general contractor and is unpaid, the lien of the subcontractor attaches against the owner although the work of the general contractor is still unfinished.⁸⁹ On the other hand, it has been held that the lien is not created until labor is performed⁹⁰ or material furnished,⁹¹ or that, in the absence of a general contract, a lien does not attach before claimant commences to furnish labor or materials⁹² Where the materials are furnished at the request of one who is not the owner of the realty, or the owner's agent, a lien therefor does not attach as of the date of the furnishing of the materials⁹³

The rules under which a mechanic's lien is held to attach at the beginning of the work or of the furnishing of materials have been held applicable at least against the owner of the realty contracting therefor,⁹⁴ and where the labor or material is furnished or supplied under a continuing contract⁹⁵ or running account,⁹⁶ or the work is practically continuous and tends to the accomplishment of one object,⁹⁷ and it has also been held applicable where an individual mechanic or materialman claims a lien if there is no general construction contract⁹⁸ If two deliveries are made under separate contracts and there is no general contractor, the lien for the second delivery does not relate back to the first delivery.⁹⁹ Where the materialman accepts payment for the materials first furnished he waives the lien from the date of the first furnishing of materials.¹

§ 182. — On Date of Notice to Owner

Under some statutes it has been held that the lien of a person other than the contractor attaches when, and only when, he gives notice to the owner of his intention to claim the lien.

Under some statutes it has been held that the lien of a person other than the contractor attaches when and only when he gives notice to the owner of his intention to claim the lien,² but under other statutes the lien does not date from the time of giving such notice to the owner³

§ 183. Continuance and Expiration

The continuance of a mechanic's lien, once established, depends entirely on statutory provisions, and accordingly the duration of the lien may be limited to a certain period unless the lien is revived or continued by the taking of such additional proceedings as may be provided by the statute.

The continuance of a mechanic's lien, once established, depends entirely on statutory provisions,⁴ it is without limit as to duration, and there is no principle which operates to destroy it except such as is provided by statute or is adopted in analogy to its provisions⁵ In accordance with provisions of the statutes the duration of the lien is limited to a certain period⁶ after the doing of the work, the furnishing of the materials, or the completion of the improvement,⁷ the time payment became due,⁸ or the filing of the notice, claim, or statement,⁹ unless the lien is revived or continued by the taking of such proceedings as may be provided by statute,¹⁰ such as by instituting an action or proceeding to enforce the lien¹¹ or scire facias proceedings to revive the

Liens not extending liens or suing within three months after filing lien,¹² or obtaining an order continuing the lien.¹³

The commencement of proceedings to enforce the lien before it has expired by limitation is sufficient to preserve it until the conclusion of such proceedings,¹⁴ provided, when so required by statute, a notice of the pendency of the action is filed.¹⁵ Also under some statutes the lien is continued when, within the statutory period, claimant is made a party defendant in an action to enforce another lien,¹⁶ or a cross bill is filed by him in such action,¹⁷ and a notice of lis pendens is filed,¹⁸ but the mere commencement of an action to enforce the lien of one person does not have the effect of continuing the liens of other persons against the property.¹⁹ In jurisdictions where the lien relates back to the date of the contract, the lien, having once attached, continues until everything required by the contract has been done²⁰ unless the contract is terminated in some way before it is fully performed.²¹

C. PROPERTY, ESTATES, AND RIGHTS AFFECTED

As a general rule a mechanic's lien extends only to the building, structure, or improvement, the land on which it is situated, and the fixtures and appurtenances

As a general rule in the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, a mechanic's lien extends and is confined to the building, structure, or improvement, the land on which it is situated, and the fixtures and appurtenances.²² "Property," within a constitutional provision giving a mechanic's lien, refers to a building or other structure for which materials have been furnished or labor bestowed, not simply, in case of a tenant, to his leasehold estate.²³ The lien does not cover property not described in the claim filed by the lienor.²⁴

Property primarily or incidentally affected. Some statutes have been construed to confer a primary lien on the building, structure, or improvement²⁵ and to extend the lien to the land only incidentally.²⁶

and in order to effectuate the primary lien²⁷ Other statutes have been construed to confer a lien on buildings or improvements only as appurtenant to the land.²⁸

Generally a mechanic's lien extends only to the land on which the building or improvement is situated and does not attach to land on which no lienable improvement has been made.

A mechanic's lien extends to and covers the land on which the building or improvement is situated.²⁹ The lien may be enforced, in some jurisdictions, against both the building or improvement and the land³⁰ or against the building or improvement alone, as discussed infra § 188. It does not attach to land on which no lienable improvement has been made,³¹ nor does it ordinarily extend to land which is outside of, and distinct from, the lot or parcel on which the building or improvement stands;³² but the inclusion in the lien statement of land on which no lienable improvement has been made does not invalidate the lien as to the improved land.³³ Under a few statutes the lien may attach to the land for the improvement of which materials were furnished, even though the improvement was actually made on other land,³⁴ and under some statutes the lien has been held to extend to all the land described in the lien contract.³⁵

tenant thereto³⁹ Conversely, the lien cannot be extended so as to include land not necessary for the convenient and proper use of the building or improvement,⁴⁰ or not properly appurtenant thereto,⁴¹ even though the use and occupation of the building would be much more profitable if such land were used and occupied in connection therewith⁴²

In applying the foregoing rules, due consideration should be given to the character and purpose of the improvement,⁴³ but the market value of the improved land may not be considered in establishing the extent of the lien upon the adjoining land for convenient use of the improved land⁴⁴ The court has a wide discretion in determining the extent of the land about a structure which may be reasonably required for the convenient use and occupation of it,⁴⁵ but its determination must be based on competent evidence⁴⁶

b. Entire Lot or Tract

Ordinarily a mechanic's lien covers the entire lot, tract, or parcel upon which the building or improvement is situated.

Ordinarily a mechanic's lien covers the entire lot, tract, or parcel upon which the building or improvement is situated⁴⁷ Thus in a case of a farm the lien ordinarily extends to the entire farm,⁴⁸ and in case of a town or city lot it extends to the entire lot.⁴⁹ The word "lot," as used in this connection, does not, except in some instances,⁵⁰ necessarily mean a surveyed or platted lot,⁵¹ but rather means a single and entire tract or parcel⁵² Under this construction the lien may extend to two or more lots used and treated as a single tract or parcel,⁵³ even though they are separately owned by different persons,⁵⁴ or it may cover only part of a lot where the lot has been divided into two or more parcels designed for separate use⁵⁵

There are cases, however, in which the lien has been held not to extend to the entire tract on which the building or improvement is situated,⁵⁶ as where the case comes within statute limiting the lien to a specified area, and the tract exceeds the statutory limit, as discussed infra subdivision c of this section, or where to extend the lien to the entire lot would work hardship and injustice,⁵⁷ or where the new building is on part of a lot on which is located a homestead exempt from mechanics' liens⁵⁸ Some courts have held that the lien does not extend to the entire lot where there are other independent buildings, previously erected, on the same lot,⁵⁹ but other courts have held that the lien extends to the entire lot, even though there are on it buildings previously erected,⁶⁰ or at least that there must be proof of something more than the mere existence of another building on the lot in order to exclude any part of the lot from the operation of the lien⁶¹

It has been held that the lien may, at the option of the holder thereof, be enforced on a part only of the whole lot,⁶² but there is some authority to the contrary.⁶³ A distinction is sometimes drawn between the amount of land subject to the lien in the first instance and the amount which should be sold to satisfy the lien,⁶⁴ even though an entire tract is subject to the lien, where the tract can be divided without injury only so much thereof as is necessary to satisfy the lien should be sold, as discussed infra § 338. It has been held that the lien extends to as much of the tract of land on which the house is built as, with the house, would be required to discharge it⁶⁵

c. Statutory Limitation of Area

Under some statutes a mechanic's lien may not cover more than a designated area of land.

Under some statutes a mechanic's lien may not cover more than a designated area of land.⁶⁶ These statutes are sometimes limited in their application to certain cases,⁶⁷ but, where applicable, they determine the area of land subject to the lien,⁶⁸ even though the building or improvement stands on a single tract larger than the statutory area,⁶⁹ unless the parties have, by contract, extended the area of land to be covered by the lien beyond the statutory limit.⁷⁰

§ 187. Building or Improvement

Generally the mechanic's lien given by statute extends to and covers the entire building, structure, or improvement as such and it cannot be maintained on a part of the building or structure.

As a general rule the lien given by a mechanics' lien statute extends to and covers the entire building, structure, or improvement⁷¹ as such⁷² in its entirety.⁷³ The lien cannot be maintained on, enforced against, or confined to, a part of the building, structure, or improvement,⁷⁴ and this rule applies although the work may have been done for the sole and exclusive benefit of the occupant or lessee of part of the building.⁷⁵ In some jurisdictions, however, the lien may, or must, be confined to a part of the building or improvement in certain cas-

Generally the lien does not extend to a building other than the one for the construction or repair of which the labor was performed or the material was furnished,⁸⁰ such as another building subsequently erected on the same lot under a separate contract by another person,⁸¹ or another building in existence when the building for which the labor or materials were furnished was erected,⁸² unless the old building is appurtenant to the new building⁸³ or stands on ground belonging to the same owner and is so related to the new building as to subserve a common purpose⁸⁴. However, it has been held that on the destruction of the building on account of which the lien is claimed and the erection of another building on the lot by another person, such new building becomes a part of the realty and subject to the lien⁸⁵

New or existing building

(1) Under statute a contract vendee may subject a new building erected by him to mechanics' liens, although the building is attached to the land, so as to become real property, but, where he merely repairs an existing building, only his interest is subject to such liens, especially where the repairs do not increase the value of the freehold—Ford v Dixon, 157 SW 99, 171 Mo App 275

§ 188. — Building or Improvement Alone

A building or improvement, as distinct from the land, may be subjected to a mechanic's lien under certain circumstances.

A building or improvement, as distinct from the land, may be subjected to a mechanic's lien under certain circumstances,⁸⁶ although a lien on the building or improvement alone has been denied in some cases,⁸⁷ and under some statutes it has been broadly held that a mechanic's lien cannot attach to, or be enforced against, a building alone apart from the land on which it is located⁸⁸

The circumstances under which a lien has been held to attach to the building alone include generally cases in which the contract for the construction of the building or improvement has been made with a person who is not the owner of the land or his authorized agent⁸⁹ or who has no legal title to the land⁹⁰ and the owner has duly posted notice of nonresponsibility,⁹¹ cases where a building is erected wholly on the land of another by mistake,⁹² and

cases where there is a prior encumbrance on the land⁹³ So it has been held that alterations and repairs on a building or structure, if made by a person not the owner of the land, may be subjected to the lien if detachable from the original building without injury⁹⁴ or if capable of identification and practical severance,⁹⁵ but in some jurisdictions the building may be removed even though injury may result to the realty.⁹⁶

Ordinarily the lien may attach to the building or improvement alone where the building is erected or improvement made by a vendee,⁹⁷ and such lien will have precedence over any claim of the vendor,⁹⁸ although generally it will not affect the interest of the vendor in the land, as discussed infra § 194. In the absence of some statutory provision, however, the lien cannot be enforced against the improvement to the injury of the vendor.⁹⁹

Where a lessee of land erects a building or makes improvements thereon, the building or improvement alone may be subject to lien,¹ at least where it does not become part of the realty.² So the lien may attach to the building alone where it is erected by a tenant at will³ and is removable by him⁴ Conversely it has been held that the lien cannot attach to the building alone where it is not subject to removal by the occupant or tenant at will,⁵ although it has also been held that it is no objection to enforcement of a lien on buildings and improvements on leased premises, erected or made under a contract with the lessee, that there is a provision in the lease prohibiting the removal of the improvements from the premises unless the rent is paid.⁶

Where a building is erected or improvement made on the land of a married woman, without her consent, under a contract with her husband, the building or improvement alone has been held subject to lien and removal, if this may be done without injury to the premises,⁷ although no lien may be claimed on the building or premises as a whole, apart from the portion improved by the husband.⁸ Some,⁹ but not other,¹⁰ courts hold that the lien may attach to the building or improvement alone where the land is owned by husband and wife as tenants by the entirety and the contract for the building or improvement is made with the husband alone.

Under some statutes it has been held that the lien may be enforced against the building alone, although the owner of the building is also the owner of the land on which it stands,¹¹ and that enforcement of the lien against the entire interest of the owner of the property is not required,¹² but under other statutes it has been held that, where the owner of the building also owns the land, and there is no prior lien or encumbrance on the land, it is error to limit the lien to the building alone.¹³

§ 189. Several Lots or Buildings

- a In general
- b Single building or improvement on two or more lots
- c Two or more buildings or improvements
- d Property of different owners

a. In General

Generally a lien for the entire amount due for work done on, or materials furnished for, several buildings or lots cannot attach to, or be enforced against, part of the buildings or lots.

While a lien for the entire amount due for work done on, or materials furnished for, several buildings or lots ordinarily cannot attach to, or be enforced against, part of the buildings or lots,¹⁴ a lien has been allowed against part of the buildings or lots under some circumstances.¹⁵ Where it is sought to enforce the lien on less than the whole number of buildings or lots, each building has been held subject to the lien only to the extent of what was done or furnished therefor,¹⁶ and each lot only to the extent of what was done or furnished for the building or improvement thereon.¹⁷ The lien is properly confined to the building upon which the work was done, although the original contract embraced other buildings,¹⁸ at least where a separate lien was filed for each building.¹⁹

b. Single Building or Improvement on Two or More Lots

Where one building or improvement extends over two or more adjoining lots or parcels owned by the same person, the lien ordinarily extends to the building or improvement and all the lots or parcels on which it is situated,²⁰ especially where the owner treats all the lots or parcels as a single undivided tract.²¹ This rule applies in the case of a solid block of buildings erected by the same owner at the same time,²² even though the various houses may be distinct,²³ for in such case the entire structure may be regarded as one building.²⁴ However, where a mechanic performs work under two separate contracts on one block of houses, he cannot enforce a lien on the whole block as one estate for the general balance due from the owner.²⁵

Generally the question whether a lien will attach to one or more buildings depends on whether labor was performed or materials were furnished under a single contract or under separate contracts.

under an entire contract on separate buildings owned by the same person and situated upon the same lot or tract, the lien attaches on the whole property for the whole value of the labor or material,²⁷ but the rule is otherwise where there are separate contracts,²⁸ and the lien must be separate and several, not joint, if the contracts under which the work is done are several²⁹

It has also been held in some jurisdictions that a lien for the entire amount due for labor performed or materials furnished in the construction of several buildings on separate lots under a single contract with the owner attaches to all the buildings and lots,³⁰ at least where the lots are contiguous,³¹ and according to some,³² but not other,³³ authorities even where the lots are not contiguous, but in other jurisdictions it has been held that in such case the lien, instead of being extended to all the buildings and lots for the aggregate value of the labor and materials,³⁴ should be confined, in respect of each building and lot, to the value of the labor and material expended thereon,³⁵ at least where subsequent purchasers and encumbrancers have become interested in different portions of the premises.³⁶

Severable contract It has also been held that a lien attaches to each separate building or lot only for the value of the work or materials furnished that building or lot where, although there is only one contract, it is severable as to each lot and the improvement thereon³⁷

It has been held, where an entire contract is made for improvements on adjoining properties of different owners, that an entire lien attaches to the properties as a whole; but other decisions hold that the claim should be apportioned between the properties according to the improvements made if such apportionment is practicable.

It has been held, where the owners of adjoining properties join in making an entire contract for improvements thereon, that an entire lien attaches to the properties as a whole for what was done or furnished thereunder³⁸ and that a valid lien cannot attach only to one lot and the portion of the building thereon³⁹ According to other decisions, where improvements are made on the property of different owners, the lien will attach to each of the lots only for the labor and materials expended in the improvement of the particular lot,⁴⁰ and the total cost of the improvements should be apportioned between or among the lots accordingly,⁴¹ but a single lien may be appropriate where apportionment of the claim is impracticable.⁴² At any rate where there are separate contracts, a lien does not attach to both properties for materials furnished for both.⁴³

§ 190. Fixtures, Materials, and Personal Property

A mechanic's lien generally extends to and covers fixtures which have been divested of their character as personal property by being attached to the realty so as to become a part thereof, and under some statutes materials and machinery, not incorporated in, or attached to, the realty, are covered by the lien.

Ordinarily a mechanic's lien does not apply to personal property as such,⁴⁴ although the lien extends to and covers fixtures.⁴⁵ Usually the lien does not attach to articles which have not been divested of their character as personal property by being attached to the realty so as to become a part thereof,⁴⁶ nor does it attach directly to materials or specific articles, as such, which were furnished for the building,⁴⁷ regardless of whether they are incorporated in the building⁴⁸ or are unused.⁴⁹ However, a few statutes give a mechanic's lien on materials furnished,⁵⁰ even though they are not incorporated in the building⁵¹ or have not become a part of the realty.⁵² One view is that under such statutes a mechanic's lien may attach to personalty.⁵³ Another view is that materials furnished in good faith for the construction of a building, but not used therein, are in effect a part of the realty so as to come within the operation of the lien.⁵⁴

Machinery Under the statutes of some jurisdictions a mechanic's lien extends to and covers machinery when,⁵⁵ and only when,⁵⁶ it is so attached to the realty as to be a part thereof, it does not attach to the machinery as such,⁵⁷ but only indirectly to it as part of the building or structure to which it is attached and of which it is a part.⁵⁸ Under the statutes of other jurisdictions a mechanic's lien for furnishing machinery may attach to machinery which retains its character of personalty and does not become a fixture.⁵⁹

A mortgage may be "subject to" a mechanic's lien in the sense of being "subordinate to" or "inferior to" the lien,⁶⁰ but not in the sense that the lien attaches to the mortgage debt⁶¹ or the mortgage itself.⁶²

Erection or installation by person not owner of land. Any fixture erected or installed by a person not the owner of the land may be subjected to the lien if detachable from the building without injury.⁶³ However, it has been held that a permanent structure, which was erected by a tenant under a lease providing that it become the landlord's property on termination of the lease, does not become a fixture free of lien until all mechanics' lien claimants have been paid, notwithstanding the posting and filing of notice of nonresponsibility.⁶⁴

§ 191. Estates or Interests

Generally, a mechanic's lien attaches to whatever interest or estate in the property is owned by the person who caused the building or other improvement to be placed thereon.

§ 193. — At Particular Time

A mechanic's lien extends to the interest owned by the person who caused the improvement to be made at the time the lien attached, or when the work or furnishing of materials commenced, and it has been held that the lien also extends to an interest subsequently acquired by him.

A mechanic's lien extends at least to the interest owned by the person who caused the improvement to be made at the time the lien attached⁷⁶ or when the work⁷⁷ or the furnishing of the materials⁷⁸ commenced. It has generally been held that the lien extends also to an interest subsequently acquired by the person responsible for the improvement⁷⁹ at least where no intervening equity forbids⁸⁰ or where the acquisition is during the progress of the improvement⁸¹ or is of an interest which increases or enlarges the estate to which the lien has already attached⁸² as distinguished from a distinct and independent interest which does not merge in the estate previously held⁸³ It has even been held that the lien attaches to an interest subsequently acquired by a person who had no title or interest at the time the contract was made ⁸⁴

In some jurisdictions, however, the lien is limited to the interest of the owner who caused the improvement to be made at the time the lien attached,⁸⁵ the time the work,⁸⁶ building,⁸⁷ or furnishing of materials⁸⁸ began, or the time the notice or claim was filed,⁸⁹ and does not extend to a subsequently acquired interest ⁹⁰ It has been held, where the owner changes his interest in lots from a fee into a leasehold after the erection of the buildings, that a lien may, at the election of claimant, be claimed against the lesser interest.⁹¹ However, it has also been held that it is not in the power of the lienor to enlarge or diminish the interest to which the lien, by the statute, attaches.⁹²

§ 194. — Interest of Vendor for Improvements of Purchaser

A mechanic's lien for improvements by the purchaser ordinarily does not attach to the vendor's interest in the property if he has not done anything to subject his interest to liability.

As a general rule, where the purchaser of property is responsible for a building, improvement, or structure by reason of which a mechanic's lien may be claimed against his interest, the interest of the vendor of the property is not subject to the lien if he has not done anything which would render his interest liable to the lien under the statutes of the particular jurisdiction,⁹³ as by consenting to the improvements or knowingly permitting the purchaser to contract therefor, as discussed supra § 71, or by failing to give statutory notice of nonresponsibility after acquiring knowledge of the improvement, discussed supra § 84 The lien against the purchaser's equitable estate ordinarily will not extend to the vendor's fee interest on the acquisition by the vendor of the purchaser's equitable estate ⁹⁴

§ 195. — Reversion of Landlord for Improvements by Tenant

A mechanic's lien for improvements made on land by a tenant ordinarily does not extend to the interest of the landlord if the latter has not done anything to subject his interest to liability

Ordinarily a mechanic's lien for improvements on land made by a tenant does not extend to the interest of the landlord, if, under the statutes, he has not rendered his interest subject to liability,⁹⁵ by consenting to the improvement or knowingly permitting the tenant to contract therefor, as discussed supra § 65, or by failing to give statutory notice of nonresponsibility after acquiring knowledge of the improvement, discussed supra § 84.

§ 196. Rents and Proceeds of Property

Where the property subject to a mechanic's lien has been sold and converted into money, under such circumstances as to be discharged of the lien or beyond the reach of the court, the lien may attach to, and be satisfied out of, the proceeds⁹⁶ However, where the building has been destroyed by fire, the lien does not attach to the proceeds of a fire insurance policy.⁹⁷ Rents of leased premises, continuing in the possession of the owner and his lessee until the date fixed by decree foreclosing mechanic's liens thereon, belong to the owner so that the lienors may be entitled to the award of such rents toward the payment of the owner's debts to them, if they establish priority over other claimants,⁹⁸ but on expiration of the date fixed by the decree the property may be regarded as appropriated by the lienors, and they are not entitled to payment of rents by the receiver thereof where the value of their equity in the property is sufficient to satisfy the owner's debts to them⁹⁹

In some instances it has been held that, where the lien is unenforceable against the property, claimant is entitled to payment out of rents received by a testamentary trustee¹ or the representatives or heirs of the owner,² but they are not entitled to payment from the revenue of a spendthrift trust.³

Priorities given by mechanics' lien statutes sometimes depend on the filing of the lien, although, if filed, the lien may affect third persons during the period it was not of record.

Under some statutes the priorities given by the mechanics' lien statutes depend on the filing of the lien⁴ and do not exist as inchoate rights arising from the fact that labor has been done or materials furnished⁵ However, a lien or privilege, if recorded within the time and in the manner prescribed by law, may affect third persons during the period in which it was not of record,⁶ and the fact that the work is in progress has been held notice to all who deal with the property of the statutory right of materialmen and mechanics to perfect liens thereon.⁷ It has also been held that the priority of mechanics' liens may be established in equity, although they were not filed within the time fixed by statute.⁸

ing out of the erection of the same building or improvement stand on an equality⁹ and share pro rata in the amount realized where it is not sufficient to pay all in full¹⁰. Sometimes the rule is deemed applicable regardless of whether the claims are for labor or for materials,¹¹ or of the times when the several claimants entered into¹² or registered¹³ their contracts, actually commenced to perform work or furnish materials,¹⁴ served notices of intention to file liens,¹⁵ filed their respective claims, statements, or notices,¹⁶ or proceeded to enforce their liens¹⁷. The claim of a person who has failed to take all the steps necessary fully to protect his rights may be postponed to the claims of other persons¹⁸. The action of lien claimants in lulling other claimants into inactivity may, under some circumstances, be sufficient reason for giving priority to the other labor and material liens¹⁹.

Abandonment of contract by contractor. The general rule that, where the amount available for the satisfaction of liens is not sufficient to pay all claims in full, all are to share pro rata applies where the principal contractor abandons the work²⁰. However, a subcontractor undertaking to complete the contract of the principal contractor may, by agreement with another subcontractor, be entitled to priority over the latter²¹. Also it has been held that claims for extras, beyond and outside the contract, furnished by a materialman to the owner of a building, in order to enable him to complete it after the contractor had made default, are entitled to priority over claims by materialmen for material furnished the contractor²².

Effect of judgment on lien. The fact that a judgment at law has been entered on a lien does not necessarily give it priority in payment or advantage over liens on which a judgment has not been rendered,²³ and a claimant who has not preserved his lien in the manner required by statute may not obtain priority over other claimants, who have preserved their liens under the statute, by resorting to attachment proceedings and obtaining judgment on his claim²⁴

Different improvements As between mechanics' liens arising out of different improvements on the same property, the lien which first attached has priority²⁵ Under some statutory provisions, in the case of several buildings constructed under one contract, if there are conflicting liens each lienor has priority on the particular building where his labor was performed or his material used,²⁶ and where a lien on particular property is subject to a prior lien covering that property and also other property, and the prior liens are cut off as to the other property, the prior liens take precedence in the particular property only to the extent of the value of the labor and material that went into such property²⁷

b. Priority Determined by Time

Under some statutes mechanics' liens have precedence in the order in which the respective claims accrued or were filed

Under some statutes mechanics' liens have precedence according to the order in which the respective claims, notices, or statements were filed for record,²⁸ at least where statutes preferring or postponing certain classes of claims are not applicable and all claims are in the same class²⁹ Also under some statutes there are priorities between claimants, or at least claimants of a particular class, based on the time when their liens accrued,³⁰ when they severally commenced to render services or furnish materials,³¹ when notices were served³² or steps were taken to enforce their respective liens³³

Under a statute providing for a preferred position to lien claimants who give statutory notice, no preference is obtained by a lien claimant who fails to comply with the statutory requirements as to the form of the notice³⁴ Priority of a mechanic's lien has been held not destroyed by mere formal compliance with a statute providing for the subordination of liens to a subsequent mortgage and the placing of all such subordinated liens on a par with respect to each other³⁵

c. Preference or Postponement of Particular Classes of Claimants

The class or nature of the claim asserted affects the priority of a mechanic's lien under some statutes.

Priorities between different claims or claimants according to the class or nature of the claims are prescribed by the statutes of some jurisdictions³⁶ The liens of laborers are given preference over the liens of other claimants,³⁷ such as materialmen³⁸ or contractors,³⁹ by the statutes of some jurisdictions, at least in certain cases⁴⁰ Also under the statutes of some jurisdictions the rights of the principal contractor are postponed to those of all other claimants whose claims arise through him,⁴¹ and the rights of

d. Effect of Intervening Encumbrance

The existence of an intervening encumbrance which is superior to some mechanics' liens, but inferior to others, may prevent the equality which would otherwise exist as between the mechanics' liens.

Although as between themselves several mechanics' liens may be entitled to stand on an equality, this may be prevented by the existence of an encumbrance which, while inferior to some of the liens, is superior to others,⁴⁵ in such case the fund is to be applied first to the payment of the liens superior to the intervening encumbrance, in full or pro rata as the case may be, next to the encumbrance, and lastly to the liens inferior to the encumbrance, pro rata.⁴⁶ The rule may apply even though the debt secured by the intervening encumbrance is not yet due and payable⁴⁷

Where one who performs labor or furnishes material under the contract between the owner and the contractor acquires a lien as of the time the contractor commenced his work, but one who furnishes labor or material directly to the owner acquires a lien only from the time he commences to furnish the labor or material, no lien, mortgage, or other encumbrance can intervene between the liens of laborers and materialmen when the claimants' rights relate to and originate in a contract between the owner and contractor,⁴⁸ whereas, if the labor is performed or the material furnished directly to and on the credit of the owner, mortgage liens and other encumbrances may attach to the property between the dates that their rights to their liens accrue, and thereby defeat the equality which would otherwise exist as between the lien claimants⁴⁹

e. Liens on Amount Due Contractor or Subcontractor

Under some statutes mechanics' liens on funds due to a contractor or subcontractor take precedence in the order in which the lien claimants served their notices; but under other statutes the amount available is distributable pro rata among the claimants

Under some statutes giving subcontractors, materialmen, etc, a lien on the amount due the contractor from the owner, claimants are sometimes entitled to priority of payment out of such fund in the order of the time in which their notices were served on the owner,⁵⁰ or are to be preferred⁵¹ or postponed⁵² according to their diligence or lack of diligence. Under other statutes the amount is to be distributed pro rata among claimants⁵³ who have complied with the statute by giving the proper no-

Where the contractor has completed at a loss work abandoned by a subcontractor, his claim ordinarily takes precedence over the claims of persons who did work for, and furnished materials to, the subcontractor and served stop notices.⁵⁷ At least where title to the materials has not passed to the contractor, and the contractor is not indebted to the subcontractor, one who has supplied materials to the subcontractor and has filed and served a stop notice in compliance with the mechanics' lien law is not entitled to priority of payment out of moneys due the contractor from the building owner.⁵⁸ However, it has been held that where the building contractor has assumed title to all materials delivered on the job he cannot avoid payment from moneys due under the contract merely because he expended more money in completing the subcontract than the balance due thereunder.⁵⁹

§ 199. Between Mechanic's Lien and Mortgages or Like Encumbrances

In general priorities as between mechanics' liens and mortgages or like encumbrances depend on the provisions of the various statutes and the facts of the particular case.

In any given case, priorities as between mechanics' liens and mortgages or like encumbrances depend on the provisions of the statutes and the facts and circumstances of the case.⁶¹ Particular statutes, however, have been construed as not affecting the matter of priority as between mortgages and mechanics' liens.⁶² Thus a statute, the purpose and object of which are to define and fix the respective rights of mechanics' liens inter sese only, does not affect the matter of priority as between mechanics' liens and a mortgage.⁶³ A mortgagee takes priority over a lien claimant where it appears that the items for which the lien is claimed are nonlienable.⁶⁴

Furniture

Where the articles supplied consisted of furniture, rather than fixtures constituting an improvement to realty, one claiming a lien therefor him will not affect the priority of the claimant of a mechanic's lien.⁶⁵ One who acquires title through a trust deed superior to a mechanic's lien acquires rights superior to the lien without reference to notice or want of notice of the lien.⁶⁶

§ 200. — Priority in Time

- a In general
- b Making of contract
- c Commencement of building or improvement
- d Performance of labor or furnishing of materials by claimant
- e Time when mortgage attaches

a. In General

The general rule is that, as between mechanics' liens and mortgages or like encumbrances, the one which first attaches is entitled to priority, but under some statutes a lien for labor or materials may take precedence over a prior mortgage.

It is well established as a general rule that, as against other encumbrances such as mortgages and deeds of trust, a mechanic's lien takes precedence according to the time when it attached to the property.⁶⁷ Thus a mechanic's lien ordinarily has priority over a mortgage or deed of trust given or attaching after the lien accrued,⁶⁸ although under some circumstances a subsequent mortgage or like encumbrance may obtain priority over a mechanic's lien,⁶⁹ as where the mortgage is of a kind given priority by statute, as discussed infra § 201, or a priority which would otherwise exist has been lost, as discussed infra § 204. Under some statutes mechanics' liens may be rendered subordinate to a mortgage thereafter given where a specified per cent of mechanic's lienholders have given their consent that the liens shall be subordinate to the mortgage.⁷⁰

On the other hand, it is also a general rule that, where the property is subject to a mortgage or like encumbrance at the time of the accrual of a mechanic's lien, such mortgage or encumbrance retains its priority and the mechanic's lien is postponed thereto,⁷¹ notwithstanding the value of the mortgage security is increased by the labor or ma-could not have priority over the claim of a mortgagee of the premises—Telsey v Calvin-Morris Corporation, supra.

Materials furnished for other buildings

terial of the mechanic's lien claimant⁷² or the building is so changed that very little of the original structure remains⁷³ Under an exception expressly created by some statutes, a lien for labor takes precedence over a prior mortgage⁷⁴ Likewise, under some statutes, the lien of a materialman may be superior to a mortgage even though the mortgage was recorded before the recording of the materialman's claim⁷⁵

Statement in claim as to time of accrual of lien.

A lien claimant will not be permitted to claim or show that the lien attached at a date prior to that fixed in his claim or statement for the purpose of cutting out an encumbrance executed and recorded before that time⁷⁶

b. Making of Contract

Under some statutes a mortgage or trust deed which was given after the time of the making of the contract between the owner and mechanic is subject to the mechanic's lien even though the labor was not performed or the materials furnished until after the giving of the mortgage.

Under statutes by which a lien attaches at the time the contract between the owner and mechanic is made, discussed supra § 178, a mortgage or trust deed given thereafter is subject to the lien of the mechanic⁷⁷ although the mortgage is given⁷⁸ and recorded⁷⁹ before the labor is performed or the materials furnished Conversely, a mechanic's lien is subject to a mortgage or deed of trust given prior to, and existing at the time of, the making of the contract⁸⁰ even though the improvements for which the lien is claimed were contemplated by the mortgagor prior to the execution of the mortgage,⁸¹ and in order to entitle claimant to priority over a mortgage there must have been at the time the mortgage was made a contract with the owner of the property for the improvement,⁸² of which the mortgagee had actual or constructive notice⁸³

Under other statutes the time when the contract was made is generally not deemed material in determining the priority between a mechanic's lien and a mortgage⁸⁴ Thus in jurisdictions where a mechanic's lien attaches only from the time claimant commenced to perform labor or furnish materials, as discussed supra § 181, the lien is inferior to a mortgage given before that time even though claimant's contract antedated the mortgage⁸⁵ and the mortgagee or trustee in the trust deed knew of the existence of the contract.⁸⁶ Also in some jurisdictions a mechanic's lien takes precedence of a mortgage given after the building or improvement was commenced even though it was given prior to the making of the contract under which the work in question was done⁸⁷

Under a few statutes the lien of a contractor is superior to trust deeds executed and recorded subsequent to the execution of the contract,⁸⁸ but the lien of a materialman does not relate back to the date of the contract between the contractor and the owner so as to give priority over a mortgage executed after that date but before claimant commenced to furnish material⁸⁹

c. Commencement of Building or Improvement

A mechanic's lien, under some statutes, has priority over a mortgage given and recorded after the building or improvement was commenced even though the mortgage was given before the mechanic's lienor performed work or furnished materials.

Under a number of statutes a mortgage or like encumbrance given and recorded prior to the commencement of the building or improvement takes precedence over mechanics' liens⁹⁰ even though the mortgagee had notice that a building was to be constructed with the money secured from the mortgage⁹¹ Conversely, a mechanic's lien has priority over a mortgage or other encumbrance given or recorded and attaching after the building or improvement was commenced,⁹² even though it was given before claimant performed the labor or furnished the materials on which the lien is based⁹³ Under other statutes a mortgage given prior to the time when claimant commenced to perform labor or to furnish materials has priority over a mechanic's lien even though the mortgage was given after the commencement of the building⁹⁴

In order that a particular date may be fixed as that on which the building was commenced, within the meaning of the foregoing rules, it is necessary and sufficient that, on such date, there shall have been done work of such a substantial and conspicuous character as to make it reasonably apparent to the mortgagee that the building has actually commenced,⁹⁵ and that the work shall have continued without abandonment,⁹⁶ change of plan,⁹⁷ or change of contracting parties⁹⁸ The construction must be founded on a contractual relation in good faith and not on a purpose to deceive⁹⁹ In determining whether an improvement has been begun so as to afford priority to a mechanic's lien over a mortgage given after commencement of the improvement, the term "improvement" has been held to include not only work done but also materials furnished for permanent improvement of the property.¹

Encumbrance created during progress of construction. a building is in the course of construction does not make the mortgage subordinate to a mechanic's lien where the lien claimant has not recorded his contract, instituted proceedings to enforce his lien, or given notice to the encumbrancer.³

Necessity of single contract or improvement If there is one main contract, work commenced by any subcontractor inures to the benefit of all subcontractors, materialmen, and the head contractor, in determining priority as against a mortgage filed subsequently to the commencement of the work,⁴ but, if there is more than one principal contract, then only those covered by the contract under which work was commenced may claim the benefit of such priority.⁵ Where fixtures are attached to a building after its completion and after the giving of a mortgage on the property, the contract for the fixtures cannot be tacked to performance of the building contract so as to enable the lien for the fixtures to obtain priority over the mortgage on the ground that the mortgage was given after the commencement of the building.⁶

Where a building consists of two or more distinct units or parts, such as a basement, upper stories, and added rooms, and the units are constructed at different times and under different contracts and different plans, each unit is considered as a distinct building in determining the commencement of the building or any of its distinct units with respect to the priorities of the mortgage and mechanics' liens.⁷ Where mechanics and materialmen maintain and enforce their liens separately on two lots belonging to the same person, on which buildings are being constructed at the same time, they cannot on one lot claim the advantage of the earlier commencement of the building on the other lot, so as to give them a priority over a mortgage.⁸

It is generally held that a mechanic's lien has priority over a mortgage or like encumbrance attaching after the commencement of the work or the furnishing of the materials out of which the lien arose.

A lien for materials is superior to a mortgage or deed of trust which was not given or recorded until after the materials were furnished.⁹ In this connection it is not necessary for a materialman to have completed his contract before the creation of the subsequent encumbrance,¹⁰ for it is generally held that a mechanic's lien has priority over a mortgage or other like encumbrance attaching after the commencement of the work or the furnishing of the materials out of which the lien arose,¹¹ especially

e. Time When Mortgage Attaches

A mortgage may attach, as against mechanics' liens, when it is recorded, or when money is advanced under it, of priority¹⁸ In other jurisdictions the lien of a mortgage does not necessarily attach, as against mechanics' liens, when the mortgage is executed¹⁹ or recorded,²⁰ but attaches when money is advanced under the mortgage²¹

Under some statutes a mechanic's lien may take priority over a mortgage recorded before the filing of a mechanic's lien notice, where the mortgagee has actual notice of the mechanic's lien²² Similarly, under some statutes, a mortgage or like encumbrance, although unrecorded, may take effect, as against mechanics' liens, when notice of the encumbrance is given to prospective claimants of a lien²³ On the other hand, where the legislature has expressed an intent to free the lienor of the duty to inquire as to any unrecorded outstanding encumbrance, and has made the recording of the encumbrance the controlling consideration, actual or imputed knowledge of an unrecorded mortgage will not give such mortgage the same precedence over a mechanic's lien as though the mortgage were recorded.²⁴

With respect to priority over mechanics' liens, a deed of trust or mortgage ordinarily cannot attach until the trustor or mortgagor has acquired title to the property²⁵ Further, a mortgage will not be deemed to attach, as against a mechanic's lien, before it was completely²⁶ executed,²⁷ that is, both signed and delivered,²⁸ it does not attach at a prior date when the loan secured by the mortgage was negotiated²⁹ or the debt secured was renewed,³⁰ or when the agreement was made to make the loan³¹ or to execute the mortgage³² However, it has been held that, where an agreement to give a mortgage is attempted to be carried out, but the mortgage executed is invalid for want of acknowledgment and attestation, and is subsequently perfected and recorded, but not until after a mechanic's lien has been filed on the premises, such mortgage is entitled to priority over the lien³³

(1) Mortgages securing loan were held invalid against mechanics' liens as not disclosing intention to secure future advances—Groh v. Cohen, 149 A 459, 158 Md 638.

the question, on a consideration³⁵ The mortgage must be a bona fide mortgage,³⁶ since a fictitious or fraudulent mortgage can have no priority over a mechanic's lien,³⁷ although in this connection there are some objections to a mortgage which are not available to a mechanic's lienholder³⁸ A mechanic's lien is superior to a prior mortgage intended to cover, but by mistake not covering, the property in question³⁹ unless the error in the description was palpable⁴⁰ or the lienor had actual knowledge of what property was intended to be covered by the mortgage⁴¹ Likewise a materialman is not entitled to a lien on mortgaged property as against the mortgagee where, although the materials were furnished prior to the giving of the mortgage, the building, by mistake, was erected on land other than that mortgaged.⁴²

A subsequent mortgage on a homestead has no priority over an existing mechanic's lien⁴³ A prior chattel mortgage may be subordinate to a mechanic's lien as to such portions of the property covered by the mortgage as have become fixtures⁴⁴ A mechanic's lien for improvements made pursuant to a lease obligating the lessee to make improvements is prior to an equitable mortgage of the lease which is in form an assignment of the lease⁴⁵

Provision for priority. A stipulation in a mortgage that such mortgage shall be paramount to all other liens and that the mortgagor covenants to keep the premises free from all other encumbrances cannot defeat the priority of mechanics' liens⁴⁶

the mortgagor's hands is superior to a mortgage executed previously and covering that property as after-acquired property,⁴⁷ but a mechanic's lien for improvements made on the property after the title was acquired by the mortgagor is inferior to a mortgage executed before title was acquired, but covering the property as after-acquired property.⁴⁸

Equitable ownership of property The fact that the mortgagor did not have the legal title, or full legal title, when the mortgage was made will not affect its priority as to his interest in the property, where he had an equitable title before the contract for the construction of the improvements was entered into, and the mortgage contained words of general description⁴⁹ Also the fact that the equitable owner of land in procuring a loan had the person holding the legal title in trust execute a deed of trust thereon to secure repayment of the loan will not affect the lien acquired under such deed, and postpone it in favor of a subsequent lien obtained under the statute in favor of one performing labor and furnishing materials for the erection of buildings thereon⁵⁰

Merger of estates Where a straw party executed a quitclaim deed to the real owner and also executed a trust deed which was transferred to the real owner, the owner's estates merged so as to make a subsequent mechanic's lien superior to the deed of trust⁵¹

(1) In General

An improvement mortgage is given priority, under some statutes, over mechanics' liens where the mortgage is filed before the liens. Some authorities hold, under the statutes, that a mortgage given to a lienor or contractor for the price of work or materials is inferior to the claims of mechanics' lienors.

Under the statutes in some jurisdictions a mortgage given for the purpose of improving real property is prior, in certain cases, to mechanics' liens where the improvement mortgage is filed for record before the mechanics' liens are filed⁵² or before the commencement of work or the furnishing of materials.⁵³ In the absence of such a statute, or facts bringing the case within it, the general rules governing priority between mechanics' liens and mortgages ordinarily are deemed applicable notwithstanding the loan secured by the mortgage was made with the purpose, understanding, or expectation that the proceeds thereof would be used in improving the property⁵⁴ or the mortgage was given to secure a debt for work done on, or materials furnished for, the building⁵⁵. Certainly the general rules as to priority are not affected by a provision in the mortgage for the application of proceeds to the erection of buildings where conditions precedent to the operation of the provision have not been performed⁵⁶.

Common enterprise. According to some authorities, where a mortgage is given during the construction of a building for the purpose of completing it, the mortgagee and persons subsequently performing labor or furnishing materials are engaged in a common enterprise⁵⁷ and neither is in a situation

Mortgage given to lienor or contractor. A prospective lienor cannot gain an advantage over others, known to him to have equities like his own, by securing a real estate mortgage⁵⁹. Thus it has been held that one materialman cannot secure priority of lien over other materialmen by taking a mortgage after the commencement of the building⁶⁰ and that a mortgage given to a materialman in an attempt to obtain an unlawful preference is subordinate to mechanics' lien claimants⁶¹. It has been held that a mortgage or deed of trust given to the contractor for the price of the work to be done by him is inferior to the liens of subcontractors and others notwithstanding in point of time it antedates such liens⁶². However, there is also authority holding that a trust deed delivered to a contractor in part payment of the contract price for the construction of a building, which is recorded prior to the commencement of any work or the furnishing of materials, is, in the absence of fraud or bad faith, prior to mechanics' liens subsequently arising⁶³. Further, it has held that, where the owner, in order to enable the contractor to obtain material, gives a deed of trust to the contractor which he immediately assigns to a materialman, such deed of trust takes priority over the claims of subcontractors and other materialmen subsequently arising.⁶⁴

Where a deed of trust, given to the contractor to secure payment of the contract price, is delivered in escrow and is to be effective on completion of the building as provided in the contract for the construction thereof, its effect with respect to its priority over mechanics' liens is the same on performance of the condition as though there had been a direct delivery of an executed deed of trust ⁶⁵

Second mortgage subject to first mortgage providing for advancements. It has been held that a second mortgage, although prior in point of time to mechanics' liens, is inferior thereto where it was taken subject to a first mortgage, the proceeds of which were to be applied in paying for labor and materials, and not all of the money was advanced and applied as agreed, ⁶⁶ but, where the whole amount for which the first mortgage was given is advanced and applied in the construction of the building, a second mortgage, although subject to a first mortgage the proceeds of which are to be applied to the construction of a building, is prior to mechanics' liens subsequently attaching ⁶⁷

(2) Compliance with Statutory Requirements

The priority granted to a building loan mortgage over mechanics' liens by some statutes is available only on compliance with statutory requirements, such as timely filing of the mortgage, inclusion in the mortgage of certain covenants or statements, and application of the money to the erection of the building

requisites as a condition of giving a building loan mortgage priority over mechanics' liens, in which case the lien of a mortgage which does not comply with the statutory requirements is invalid as against duly filed mechanics' liens ⁶⁸ If the statutes require the mortgage to be recorded, the mortgage is not superior where it is not recorded ⁶⁹ Some of such statutes apply only where the mortgage contains covenants specified in the statute, ⁷⁰ as well as statements so specified, ⁷¹ and is given and recorded after the actual commencement of the building or improvement ⁷² and before the filing of mechanics' liens ⁷³ Under some statutes it is essential that the money advanced be actually applied in the erection of a building on the land mortgaged, ⁷⁴ but under other provisions it is the purpose of the loan, ⁷⁵ and not the use to which the money is put, ⁷⁶ which determines the superiority of the mortgage over subsequent mechanics' liens

(1) In General

A purchase-money mortgage, whether given to the vendor of the property or to a third person, ordinarily takes priority over a mechanic's lien accruing thereafter, notwithstanding the mortgagee knew that an improvement was contemplated.

A purchase-money mortgage or like encumbrance given prior to the accrual of a mechanic's lien ordinarily will take priority thereof⁷⁷ notwithstanding the knowledge of the mortgagee that the mortgagor intended to build upon the mortgaged property⁷⁸. On the other hand, the status of a purchase-money mortgage given after mechanics' liens have attached is the same as that of the interest being purchased,⁷⁹ and hence, where such liens have attached to the interest of the vendor, they take precedence over the purchase-money mortgage⁸⁰. It has been held that the priority of a purchase-money mortgage over subsequent mechanics' liens is not lost by the fact that the sale transaction includes an agreement on the part of the purchaser to build on the land;⁸¹ but there is also authority holding that the lien is subordinate to a mechanic's lien for work done on, or materials furnished to, the property where the agreement of the vendor and purchaser requires the purchaser to make the improvement,⁸² further, where a vendor agreed to take a mortgage for the unpaid balance of the price if the vendee started to build within a specified time, and the arrangement was complied with, it was held that the vendor could not assert a lien prior to that of a materialman⁸³.

The fact that a vendor agrees that his purchase-money mortgage shall be subordinate to one given by the purchaser to obtain money with which to erect a building on the premises does not render it subordinate to mechanics' liens⁸⁴. Also the fact that the mortgage is postponed to enable the vendee to record a plat free from encumbrances, the vendor in the meanwhile holding the record title as security for the purchase price, does not increase the rights of the holders of mechanics' liens⁸⁵. It has been said that a doubt, arising from crude and loosely drawn legislation, as to whether a mechanic's lien is prior to a purchase-money mortgage should be resolved in favor of the mortgage⁸⁶.

Person to whom mortgage given In determining whether a mortgage is entitled to priority as a purchase-money mortgage, the test is not whether the mortgage is given to the vendor⁸⁷ but whether it is to be used as purchase money,⁸⁸ and a third person advancing the purchase money and taking a purchase-money mortgage can stand in no better position than the vendor, so that, if mechanics' liens have attached to the vendor's interest in the property, they take priority over the mortgage⁸⁹. Also the mere fact that the proceeds of a loan, obtained from a third person and secured by a mortgage, are used in paying the purchase price of land does not confer on the mortgagee an equity superior to prior mechanics' liens⁹⁰ where it does not appear that the lienors had anything to do with the transaction⁹¹ or that the mortgagee stands in any other position than that of an ordinary lender of money on mortgage security⁹²

Notice or recording of mortgage. It has been held that a purchase-money mortgage does not have priority over a lien for materials furnished without actual notice of the mortgage⁹³ or before the mortgage was filed,⁹⁴ but the lien of an alleged laborer who commenced his services prior to the recording of the purchase-money mortgage was held inferior to the mortgage where it appeared that the lien claimant was a promoter of the entire transaction, rather than a mere laborer.⁹⁵

(2) Improvements before Acquisition of Title

A purchase-money mortgage ordinarily takes priority over a mechanic's lien arising out of improvements made by a prospective purchaser of the property before he acquired title, at least where the vendor did not promote or consent to the improvement.

As a general rule, where a person not the owner of the property, but in possession thereof under a contract of sale or otherwise, makes improvements thereon and subsequently receives a deed of the property, and at the same time executes and delivers to the vendor a purchase-money mortgage or like instrument, the mortgage or encumbrance thus created is prior to mechanics' liens arising out of the improvements,⁹⁶ at least where the contract of sale gave the purchaser no right to do any act before title vested in him which might create a lien on the land,⁹⁷ and where the vendor did not promote⁹⁸ or consent to⁹⁹ the improvement. Likewise, where a prospective purchaser of property obtains a loan from a third person to pay the purchase money, and a mortgage to secure such loan is executed as part of the transaction by which the purchaser receives his deed, such mortgage has priority over mechanics' liens arising out of improvements on the property commenced by the purchaser before he acquired title.¹

On the other hand, according to some authorities, a lien for labor and materials has priority over the lien of a purchase-money mortgage subsequently given where a prospective grantee, who commences an improvement before acquiring title, does so with the mortgagee's knowledge or consent² and active co-operation,³ and, under a statute making the interest of an owner subject to liens for improvements made on his land unless he gives a specified notice after learning that the improvement is being made, a purchase-money mortgage recorded after the improvement is begun is subordinate to the lien for improvements where the mortgagee, although knowing of the improvement, fails to give the required notice.⁴

Character of mortgage as purchase-money mortgage The rule giving a purchase-money mortgage priority over improvements commenced before the purchaser acquired his title applies only to a technical purchase-money mortgage given as part of the transaction by which the property is conveyed to the purchaser,⁵ and if the mortgagor had more than a momentary seizin the mechanics' liens have precedence over the mortgage which he gave after having acquired title⁶ notwithstanding such mortgage was given to secure unpaid purchase money.⁷

§ 202. — Provisions of Building Contract

Under the circumstances of particular cases, certain provisions of building contracts have been held not to affect the priority of mechanics' liens as against mortgages.

Where there is no statute providing for the recording of construction contracts, the recording of a contract whereby a contractor agrees that his lien on the building shall be subordinate to a mortgage on the land does not operate as constructive notice to materialmen who furnish material used in the erection of the building.⁸ A provision in a building contract that liens "filed under this contract" for labor and material enumerated in a schedule attached thereto shall be postponed to a certain mortgage does not apply to extra work not covered by the schedule.⁹

§ 203. — Independent Agreements

Independent agreements between mechanics' lien claimants and mortgagees for the subordination of one claim as against another will be given effect, as between the parties, in accordance with their terms.

An agreement between mechanics' lien claimants and mortgagees for the postponement of the claims of the former to the claims of the latter will be given effect as between the parties thereto.¹⁰ Likewise an agreement between one claimant and a mortgagee for priority of the claim over the mortgage is enforceable by claimant against the mortgagee.¹¹ After encumbrances junior to a mechanic's lien have attached, their priority cannot be disturbed by an agreement between the owner and the lien claimant increasing the amount recoverable by the latter.¹²

A mortgagee who has subordinated his lien merely to the extent of moneys advanced under a subsequent trust mortgage, and used for building purposes, does not thereby subordinate his mortgage to subsequent mechanics' liens,¹³ and, where a mortgagee agreed that his mortgage should be subject to a subsequent mortgage, the second mortgagee has been held not entitled to add payments on mechanics' liens to the indebtedness so as to give them priority over the first mortgage,¹⁴ but persons taking a mortgage with a provision therein subordinating their lien to that of another mortgage, which in turn was subject to a mechanic's lien, necessarily acquire a lien inferior to the mechanic's lien.¹⁵ The holder of a deed of trust who consents that his claim may be subordinated to a deed of trust given to a contractor has been held subsequent in right to the claims of mechanics and materialmen who become subrogated to the rights of the contractor.¹⁶

thorized by lienor is essential to give priority to subsequent mortgage over earlier mechanics' liens, and consent, where not given in behalf of lienors and not filed, did not affect priority of nonassenting lienor.—Max Fine & Sons v Lindarose, Inc, 161 N E 447, 248 N Y 137.

Failure of consideration

Where a laborer and materialman signed a written agreement subordinating all rights, claims, and liens as against the lien of a mortgage which was about to be obtained, and the mortgage contained a provision that it covered loans to be made from time to time, the aggregate amount of which should at no time exceed a specified sum, it was held that the consideration for the subordination agreement did not fail merely because the full amount of the specified sum was not advanced.—Johnson v Florida Bank at Orlando, 13 So 2d 799, 153 Fla 120.

§ 204. —Loss of Priority; Waiver or Estoppel

- a. By mechanic's lien claimant
- b. By mortgagee

a. By Mechanic's Lien Claimant

- (1) In general
- (2) Failure or delay in perfection or enforcement of lien

(1) In General

A mechanic's lien claimant may be precluded by es-

toppel or waiver from claiming priority over a mortgage; and, where he has expressly waived his priority, the waiver will be given effect according to its terms.

The holder of a mechanic's lien may be precluded by waiver, estoppel, or the like from claiming priority over a mortgage¹⁸. He may, for example, be precluded from claiming priority over a mortgage which he in effect procured to be made¹⁹. A claimant who, after having filed a notice of lien, canceled it in order to enable the owner to borrow money on a mortgage is estopped to claim that the lien is prior to the mortgage²⁰. Where a claimant has expressly waived his lien in favor of a mortgage, the waiver will be given effect according to its terms²¹ unless it was procured from him by fraudulent representations²². However, in particular cases the facts may be insufficient to constitute either a waiver²³ or estoppel²⁴ on the part of the lienholder.

24. US—Fred T Ley & Co v. Wheat, CCA Fla, 64 F 2d 257

Fla—Hogue v D N. Morrison Const.

The priority of a mechanic's lien over a mortgage is not affected by a release by the lienor of his rights under a personal judgment against the owner,²⁵ nor does a materialman by taking a note of the owner secured by a quitclaim deed thereby relinquish his claim for a lien on the premises so as to permit a subsequent mortgage to become a prior lien.²⁶ The rights of lienors, otherwise entitled to priority, are not affected by the fact that the liens were filed at the instance of the mortgagor²⁷ or that the mortgagor concealed the existence of such liens from the mortgagee at the time of obtaining the loan for which the mortgage was given.²⁸ A waiver by the contractor which is effective as to himself alone, and which merely subordinates his claim to any surplus after liens of laborers and materialmen are satisfied, cannot operate to defeat the priority over the mortgage which statutes give to a laborer or materialman as to a building erected on the land.²⁹

(b) Enforcement of lien

(a) Perfection of Lien

Failure of a mechanic's lien claimant to comply with statutory requirements relating to the perfection and preservation of his lien, as, for example, by failing to give notice or to file a claim within the time prescribed by statute, may cause him to lose his priority over a mortgage.

The application of the general rule that a mechanic's lien is entitled to priority over mortgages or like encumbrances subsequently attaching to the property is dependent on compliance by the mechanic's lien claimant with the statutory requirements relating to the perfection and preservation of his lien,³⁰ he may lose priority over encumbrances by failing to give notice to the owner,³¹ to file a claim or statement³² within the time prescribed by statute,³³ or to comply with statutory requirements as to the form and contents of the state-

ment³⁴ The owner cannot waive compliance with statutory requirements so as to affect the rights of a mortgagee,³⁵ nor can he, by admissions inconsistent with the existing facts, restore a lost lien so as to give it precedence over encumbrances made after the lien attached³⁶

A mechanic's lien is not rendered inferior to a mortgage by reason of an error or mistake of the recording officer in indexing the lien³⁷ or in entering satisfaction thereof³⁸ Under a few statutes, where the debtor is in failing circumstances, the mechanics' claims are preferred debts whether or not notices of lien are filed³⁹ Under some statutes, applicable in certain cases, the superiority of a mechanic's lien over a preexisting mortgage may be retained by registry of the contract within a specified time⁴⁰ or lost by failure to record it within the required time⁴¹

After recording of mortgage. Under some statutes a mortgage or like encumbrance given and recorded before the lien claim is filed or perfected is entitled to priority over the lien⁴² unless the mortgagee had notice of the mechanic's lien⁴³ or unless the mortgage is fraudulent as to creditors and is not assigned until after the liens are filed,⁴⁴ but under the statutes of other jurisdictions it is not necessary, in order to entitle a mechanic's lien to priority over a mortgage, that the lien claim or statement should be filed before the mortgage is given or recorded,⁴⁵ provided claimant perfects his lien within the statutory time⁴⁶ or the mortgagee has actual notice thereof⁴⁷

(b) Enforcement of Lien

A mechanic's lien claimant may lose his priority over encumbrances by failing to commence timely and appropriate proceedings to enforce his lien

A mechanic's lien claimant may lose his priority over encumbrances by failing to commence proceedings to enforce his lien⁴⁸ within the time prescribed by statute⁴⁹ by failing to have established and determined by judgment the attaching of his lien at a date prior to the judgment,⁵⁰ or, where he and the mortgagee are defendants in a proceeding by another claimant, by failing to claim priority in his answer,⁵¹ or to serve a copy of his answer on the mortgagee,⁵² as required by statute It has been held that a lienor who is entitled to priority as to the improvement but not as to the land loses such priority by proceeding against both the land and the improvement⁵³

by failing to make the mortgagee a party in a suit to enforce the lien,⁵⁴ and the lien may be asserted as against a mortgagee after the expiration of the time allowed by statute for foreclosing the lien against the owner,⁵⁵ nevertheless the result of not making the mortgagee a party may be a loss of priority by reason of a failure to commence proceedings as against the mortgagee within the statutory period.⁵⁶ Where the owner and mortgagee are made parties defendant in the suit to establish a mechanic's lien, as required by statute, the priority of the lien over the mortgage is not lost by a failure to make other lien claimants parties.⁵⁷

b. By Mortgagees

- (1) In general
- (2) Filing or recording
- (3) Release, extinguishment, renewal, or substitution of security

(1) In General

A mortgagee may estop himself from claiming priority over a mechanic's lienor; but in order to establish a technical estoppel in such case the lienor must show some act or concealment which induced him to act otherwise than he would have done.

A mortgagee may be precluded by estoppel or the like from claiming priority over the holder of a mechanic's or materialman's lien,⁵⁸ and, where a mortgagee has failed to take the necessary steps prescribed by statute to obtain priority for himself over mechanics' liens, equity will not disregard the terms of the statutes to avoid the consequences of the mortgagee's own carelessness.⁵⁹ A mortgagee may, by reason of his having induced the furnishing of labor or material, be precluded from asserting the priority of the mortgage over a mechanic's lien.⁶⁰ Also, under a few statutes a mechanic's lien has priority over a mortgage where, before the work has begun or materials are furnished, a written notice of the contract is given the mortgagee and, after the receipt of such notice, he consents⁶¹ or fails to object within a specified time.⁶²

Of course, the facts in particular cases may not be such as to estop or preclude the mortgagee from asserting priority.⁶³ In order to establish an estoppel against the mortgagee the lienholder must show some concealment, misrepresentation, act, or declaration on which the lienholder properly relied and by which he was induced to act differently than he would otherwise have acted.⁶⁴ A mortgagee who agrees to subordinate his lien on specified conditions does not waive his prior rights where the conditions stipulated for subordination of his mortgage are not complied with.⁶⁵ It has been held that the mere fact that the mortgagee knew of the work,⁶⁶ and consented⁶⁷ or failed to object⁶⁸ thereto, does not deprive him of priority. However, it has also been held in other cases that a mortgagee, who takes a mortgage with notice that a materialman has commenced to furnish lumber for the erection of a dwelling on the premises, is not in a position to claim that the lien of the mortgage is superior to that of the materialman.⁶⁹ It has been both affirmed⁷⁰ and denied⁷¹ that a mechanic's lien has priority over a mortgage where the mortgagee, after acquiring knowledge of the improvement, fails to post a statutory notice that he will not be liable.

(2) Filing or Recording

In some, although not all, jurisdictions a mortgage loses its priority over mechanics' liens unless it is recorded before the liens accrue; and, under some statutes, a building loan mortgage loses its priority if the contract for the building loan is not timely filed.

In some jurisdictions the priority of a mortgage executed before a mechanic's lien attached is not lost by reason of the mortgage not being recorded prior to such time.⁷² In other jurisdictions, however, the general rule is that in order for a mortgage or like encumbrance to have priority over a mechanic's lien it must be recorded before the mechanic's lien accrues,⁷³ and the mere fact that it was executed before that time will not give it priority if it is not recorded until afterward,⁷⁴ unless, according to some,⁷⁵ but not all,⁷⁶ authorities, claimant had actual notice of the mortgage. Where a mortgage is not recorded within the time prescribed by statute, it is postponed to mechanics' liens which accrued after its execution but before it was recorded,⁷⁷ although such liens were not perfected until after the mortgage was recorded.⁷⁸ Mere knowledge by a lien claimant that an owner of property was compelled to and did in fact finance a construction on the premises is not sufficient to put such lien claimant on inquiry to ascertain whether or not the property is chargeable with any lien, mortgage, or other encumbrance not of record at the time the materials were commenced to be furnished.⁷⁹

where the work was done by the day without a continuing contract.⁷

Where by the terms of a contract for the sale of land the purchaser is to make certain improvements before receiving title, mechanics' liens growing out of such improvements take priority over a purchase-money mortgage given pursuant to the contract of sale only to the extent of the labor and materials necessary to the improvement as designated in the contract of sale.⁸ A mortgage in ordinary trust form which secures an entire bond issue is superior to a subsequent mechanic's lien irrespective of how many of the bonds have been placed with investors at the time of the execution of the mortgage, or subsequently.⁹ A mechanic's lien claimant who under an agreement with the owner of the property has paid certain obligations of the owner for nonlienable items cannot have priority over a mortgagee as to such items.¹⁰ The mere fact that the mortgagor borrows less from the mortgagee than he was entitled to under his agreement with the mortgagee does not entitle a subsequent materialman to priority over the mortgage to the extent of the additional amount that the mortgagor might have borrowed.¹¹

Several buildings Where several buildings are being constructed, a proposed mortgagee has a right to look to the written contract between the parties to determine their rights and the value of his security, and, where he finds a separate contract for the material and labor on each building separately, he is justified in determining that a lien, if any, will be claimed as to each building separately for the labor and material furnished therein,¹² and conduct and actions of the parties subsequent to the written contract whereby the owner approves and ratifies deviations, conduct, and actions of a ma-

terialman in such a manner as to be estopped from denying or contesting the right of the materialman to claim a joint lien on all the buildings do not necessarily bind the mortgagee.¹³

Purchase-money mortgage The priority of a purchase-money mortgage over a mechanic's lien extends to the entire balance of the purchase price remaining unpaid,¹⁴ even though part of the land has been released from the mortgage.¹⁵

Attorney's fees Under a statute providing that attorney's fees shall be taxed as costs, but not providing that they shall be a preferred claim, the fees of attorneys of various mechanics' lien claimants and mortgagees take such preference, and such preference only, as is accorded by the judgment to the respective claims and mortgages.¹⁶ It has been held that, although a mortgage given before a mechanic's lien accrued stipulates for attorney's fees in case of default in payment when due, the mechanic's lien has priority over the mortgagee's claim for such amounts.¹⁷ Similarly, it has been held that a claim for attorney's fees due to the lien claimant under his agreement is not entitled to priority over the lien of a mortgage, at least where the fees are not deemed a lienable item.¹⁸

b. Advances or Expenditures by Mortgagee

The priority of a mortgage over mechanics' liens ordinarily is limited to the amount of money actually advanced, and is sometimes further limited to advances applied to the making of the improvement; but priority may extend to advances made after, as well as before, accrual of the mechanics' liens where the making of the advances was obligatory.

As between the original mortgagee and a mechanic's lien claimant, the priority of a mortgage, other than a purchase-money mortgage, over a mechanic's lien does not necessarily extend to the face value of the mortgage,¹⁹ but is limited to the amount paid for all deliveries made before a mortgage was recorded does not give the mortgagee priority over the materialman for materials subsequently furnished under such contract—Maxwell Lumber Co v. Connelly, 287 P 64, 34 NM 562 of money actually advanced by the mortgagee under the mortgage.²⁰ Priority of the mortgage is sometimes further limited to the advances which have been actually applied in the erection of the building or the making of the improvement,²¹ at least, according to some authorities, where the mortgage comes within a statute relating to improvement or construction mortgages,²² although otherwise not.²³ The mortgage will not be allowed priority in respect of fictitious claims of the mortgagee.²⁴ On the other hand, a mortgage, otherwise inferior to a mechanic's lien, will be allowed priority to the extent of the advances which the mortgagee was induced to make by the fraud of the mechanic's lien claim-

Before or after accrual, registration, or notice of mechanic's lien. In a majority of jurisdictions, a mortgage given to secure future advances has priority over mechanics' liens subsequently arising to the extent of the full amount advanced, including what is advanced after, as well as before, the accrual of the mechanics' liens,²⁶ at least where the mortgage was recorded prior to the performance of services or the furnishing of the materials,²⁷ and the making of the advances was obligatory on the mortgagee under the terms of his contract with the mortgagor;²⁸ but as to mere voluntary advances made after the mechanics' liens accrued²⁹ and with

Where the contract between the parties, the conduct of the mortga-

notice thereof³⁰ the mortgagee is postponed. It has been asserted, however, that the rule which applies where voluntary advances are made by the mortgagee to the mortgagor under an ordinary mortgage does not apply where the mortgage secures coupon bonds which are payable to bearer and pass by delivery and have been sold to bona fide purchasers, and that advances made under such a trust deed or mortgage, even if not obligatory, have priority over all encumbrances arising subsequent to the recording of the trust deed³¹

The undertaking of a mortgagee to make future advances is not deemed optional within the rule which gives subsequent encumbrances priority over optional advances thereafter made, unless it appears from his contract, without resorting to extrinsic evidence, that he has the right to decline to make them,³² and, where the right to refuse to make them depends on a breach of the contract by the other party, the mortgagee is not required to take the chance of establishing such breach to the satisfaction of a court or jury, but may disregard it and make the stipulated advances in reliance on his security.³³

Under some statutes the mortgagee is not entitled to priority in respect of advances made after the filing or registration of the lien.³⁴ Under other statutes, where a claim or statement of lien was not filed until after the mortgage was recorded, the priority of the mortgage as to advances made depends on whether they were made before or after the mortgagee acquired actual notice that claimants had performed labor or furnished materials for which they had not been paid and for which they were entitled to assert liens, the mortgage being entitled to priority as to advances made before the mortgagee acquired actual notice,³⁵ but not in respect of advances made thereafter³⁶ Under still other statutes the mortgage is entitled to priority only in respect of advances made before the furnishing of the labor or materials for which the lien is claimed.³⁷

Expenditures by mortgagee. A mortgagee whose mortgage is prior to a mechanic's lien cannot claim priority for amounts paid by him for taxes³⁸ or insurance³⁹ on the property where there is no provision in the mortgage securing such payments by its lien. It has been held that a mortgagee whose mortgage is inferior to mechanics' liens cannot claim priority for taxes paid on the property, even though the mortgage provides that on default of the mortgagor in paying the taxes the mortgagee may pay them and tack the amount paid to his mortgage,⁴⁰ but it has also been held that an equitable mortgage of a lease, requiring the tenant to pay taxes, although otherwise inferior to a mechanic's lien, is entitled to priority as to taxes paid.⁴¹ A mortgagee who, on abandonment of the construction of the building by the owner, took possession gee, and the circumstances surrounding the transaction show that there was an agreement and understanding between the owner and the mortgagee that a building should be constructed before the money was paid, and the mortgagee had a right to refuse payment of the mortgage until the building was constructed, materialmen who furnish material for the construction of the building after the recording of the mortgage, but before the money is paid, have a lien prior to that of the mortgagee—Home Savings & Loan Ass'n v Sullivan, 284 P 30, 140 Okl 300

c. Property or Interest Covered

- (1) In general
- (2) Priority of mechanic's lien as to building or improvement only
- (3) Enhanced value of property

(1) In General

In the absence of a statute providing otherwise, the general rule is that the priority of the lien first attaching extends to both the land and the building with respect to priority between a mechanic's lien and the lien of a mortgage.

The general rule, in the absence of statute to the contrary, is that the priority of a mechanic's lien over a mortgage or like encumbrance subsequently attaching extends to both the land and the building or improvement⁴⁴ Likewise, in the absence of a statute providing otherwise, an encumbrance on the land, existing before a building is commenced, attaches to the building or improvement as it progresses, and ordinarily is entitled to priority, as to the building or improvement as well as the land, over mechanics' liens arising out of the construction of the building⁴⁵ As regards his right to priority, the holder of a mechanic's lien ordinarily is protected only to the extent of the interest in the real estate which the person to whom he furnishes material or labor holds⁴⁶

(2) Priority of Mechanic's Lien as to Building or Improvement Only

Under some statutes, where an improvement is erected on encumbered land, the encumbrance retains its priority on the land, but the mechanic's lien has priority with respect to the improvement, at least if the improvement cannot be removed without injury or if the case involves the erection of a distinct structure rather than mere repair of an existing structure.

Under the statutes of many jurisdictions, where a building or improvement is erected on encumbered land, a mechanic's lien on the building or improvement, as distinct from the land, is allowed priority over the previous encumbrance,⁴⁷ although the prior encumbrance is not displaced, but remains superior to the mechanic's lien, in respect of the property covered by the mortgage, at the time the mechanics' liens accrued,⁴⁸ such as the land⁴⁹ and any other improvements which were on it before the mechanic's lien attached⁵⁰ Such statutes, however, do not operate to confer priority on a mechanic's lien over a prior encumbrance as to the building or improvement under all circumstances,⁵¹ and do not, for example, affect the priority of a mortgage executed prior to their passage⁵²

In some,⁵³ but not other,⁵⁴ jurisdictions the application of the statutes is dependent on whether the building or improvement is susceptible of removal without material injury. However, susceptibility of the improvement to removal without substantial damage is not the only criterion for determining the question of priority.⁵⁵ Another test of precedence is whether there is a distinct and independent improvement, or merely repairs or additions to, or a remodeling, enlargement, or extension of, an existing building, the mechanic's lien having priority in the former cases,⁵⁶ but not in the latter,⁵⁷ except in some jurisdictions⁵⁸

Where buildings on mortgaged premises are destroyed by fire, a mechanic's lien arising out of the erection of new buildings in their place takes priority over the mortgage,⁵⁹ even though the mortgage permitted the use of insurance money for the erection of such new buildings;⁶⁰ but the mortgage takes priority over the mechanic's lien to the extent that material salvaged from the old building has been used in the erection of the new.⁶¹ Where the building is only partially destroyed, a lien arising out of the repairing thereof is postponed to the prior mortgage.⁶²

Mortgage for building purpose Under some statutory provisions, the fact that the mortgage was for a construction loan does not deprive the mechanic's lien of its priority as to the building.⁶³ Under other statutes, however, where a loan secured by a mortgage was made for the purpose of raising funds for the construction of a building, the mortgage has priority over mechanics' liens as to the building as well as to the land, to the extent that the money was used for the construction of the building,⁶⁴ although not to the extent that it was diverted and not so used.⁶⁵

(3) Enhanced Value of Property

Where improvements are made on encumbered property, a mechanic's lien is entitled to priority, under some statutes, as to the increased value of the property arising from the improvements, while the encumbrance retains its priority to the extent of the value of the property before the improvements.

Under some,⁶⁶ but not other,⁶⁷ statutes, where improvements are made on property which is already encumbered, the mechanic's lien is entitled to priority, in certain cases, as to the increased value of the property arising from such improvements, but the prior encumbrance retains its priority to the extent of the value of the property before the work or improvement began.⁶⁸ Conversely, under some statutes, the increased value of the property resulting from the improvement is the limit of the priority of a mechanic's lien over a prior encumbrance.⁶⁹ Enhancement is the increase in market value of the property by reason of the improvement covered by the claim for lien at the time of the making of the improvement, and is not affected by the cost of labor or material, the original amount of the claim, or the balance due thereon.⁷⁰

Lien for repairs or additions. In some,⁷¹ but not other,⁷² jurisdictions, a mechanic's lien has priority over an existing encumbrance to the extent of the betterment or increased value accruing from the repair, extension, or enlargement of an existing building, but the question of increased value has been held to arise only when repairs are made to a building located on land subject to a prior mortgage, and not in a case where an independent building is erected.⁷³

§ 206. — Effect of Priority; Remedies

- a. In general
- b. Proceedings

a. In General

The priority of a mechanic's lien over a mortgage, or vice versa, determines the amount and order in which the parties should be paid. A party who would otherwise be subordinate in right is sometimes entitled to prior payment under the doctrine of subrogation.

The priorities of the liens, as between mechanics' liens and the liens of mortgages or like encumbrances, determine the amount and order in which the parties should be paid; and the particular result in any given case depends on all the facts and circumstances thereof.⁷⁴ Thus, where a mortgage has priority over a mechanic's lien, on a sale of the property after foreclosure of the mechanic's lien, the mechanic's lien is payable only from such proceeds as are left after paying the prior mortgage lien,⁷⁵ and, if the mortgage is foreclosed and the proceeds of the sale do not exceed the amount necessary to satisfy the mortgage, there is nothing remaining on which the mechanic's lien can continue in force.⁷⁶ However, in a jurisdiction where a mechanic's lien has priority over an existing mortgage as to the building, and the mortgage retains its priority as to the land, a foreclosure of the mortgage does not affect the rights of the lienor as

Application of rents and profits

(1) The holder of a materialman's lien against property on which there was a superior deed of trust lien was not entitled to insist on application of rentals of building to reduction of obligation secured by deed of trust, since such holder had no lien on rentals in absence of application for appointment of a receiver and the impounding of current rents—R. B Spencer & Co v. Biggers, Tex Civ App, 108 S W 2d 268

(2) Where, following a sale of premises in a mortgage foreclosure suit, a receiver was continued in possession of the property during the period of redemption, a balance of moneys collected by him is payable to mechanic's lien claimants as against the holder of a trust deed whose lien is subordinate to theirs, notwithstanding the trust deed pledges the rents and profits to the payment of the debt secured—Cochran v. Malick, 271 Ill App 476

Full amount of judgment

Where a mortgage given to secure money applied to the erection of a building was prima facie prior to mechanic's lien claims, but one such claimant had established the priority of his claim by a judgment in another court, such claimant was held entitled to the full amount of his judgment in preference to the mortgagees and not merely to that proportion of the proceeds which he would receive if all lien claimants were entitled to priority—Riverside Apartment Corporation v Capitol Const Co, 152 A 763, 107 N J Eq 405, affirmed 153 A 740, 110 N J Eq 67 against the building,⁷⁷ and a foreclosure of the lien does not affect the rights of the mortgagee as against the land.⁷⁸

Where the extent of priority is fixed at a gross sum by decree of court, whatever payments are applied on the gross preference reduce the gross sum accordingly⁷⁹ and to the extent thereof bring the junior claim nearer to the point where there will be no priority over it.⁸⁰ A mortgagee has been held not entitled to complain of the items to which payments, made by an owner to a contractor having a prior lien, were applied.⁸¹ It has been held that a valid judgment by a holder of a mechanic's claim for services rendered cannot be affected by any such expedient as a subsequent foreclosure of a deed of trust on the property,⁸² regardless of whether such foreclosure is "friendly" or otherwise.⁸³

Redemption. The holder of a mechanic's lien may redeem the property from prior encumbrances,⁸⁴ but cannot compel the holders of prior encumbrances to redeem as against his lien.⁸⁵

Subrogation. In accordance with the general principles of subrogation, a mortgagee may be entitled to be subrogated to the rights of mechanics'

lienholders, as where money advanced or paid by him was used to satisfy the prior mechanics' liens,⁸⁶ or he purchased the title, acquired by claimant, of a mechanic's lien,⁸⁷ or by agreement an inferior mechanic's lien was awarded priority over the mortgage.⁸⁸ A mortgagee, otherwise subordinate to a mechanic's lien claimant, may, under the doctrine of subrogation, be entitled to priority over the mechanic's lien to the extent that the moneys loaned by him were applied to the payment of a mortgage⁸⁹ and tax liens⁹⁰ which had priority over the mechanic's lien.

b. Proceedings

Determination of priority between a mechanic's lien and a mortgage may be had in an equity suit brought expressly for such purpose, and the proceedings in such a suit are governed by the usual rules applicable in other equity suits.

Determination of priority between a mechanic's lien and a mortgage or like encumbrance may be had in a suit brought to enforce the lien, as discussed infra § 325, or in an equitable suit brought expressly for the purpose of obtaining such determination.⁹¹ The question as to the priority of a materialman's lien over a deed of trust is, under

Pleadings and evidence. In a suit brought expressly for the purpose of obtaining a determination of priority between a mechanic's lien and a mortgage or like encumbrance, the bill or petition must allege such facts as show priority under the rules obtaining in the particular jurisdiction⁹³ The general rules of evidence applicable in other civil actions have been applied in actions involving priorities as between mechanics' liens and mortgages or like encumbrances⁹⁴ A claim by a mortgagee that the money advanced under his mortgage was used in the erection of a building has been held required to be established by clear, certain, and convincing evidence⁹⁵

Relief In an equitable action for the adjudication and determination of liens and interests affecting the property, the relief granted must be in accord with the statutes and the issues and findings in the case⁹⁶

§ 207. Between Mechanics' Lien and Other Lien or Encumbrance

Priority of time generally determines priority of right as between mechanic's liens and other liens or encumbrances, except to the extent that a party may have waived or subordinated his lien. Under some statutes, a mechanic's lien has priority as to the improvement out of which his lien arose, whereas previously existing liens have priority as to the land.

The priority of a mechanic's lien with respect to other liens or encumbrances, in so far as the matter is regulated by statute, depends on the terms of the particular statute,⁹⁷ and, where such a statute is highly remedial in character, and intended to prevent the injustice made possible under preceding statutes, it is to be construed so as to give the words used the most extensive meaning of which they are reasonably susceptible⁹⁸ Some statutes relating to the preference to be given mechanics' liens where other liens are involved have been held to have no application to a case in which the improvements are made by the owner.⁹⁹

to the property after the commencement of the building² or of the work or furnishing of materials out of which the lien arises,³ or after the making of the contract for the work⁴ On the other hand, as a general rule, a mechanic's lien is subordinate to other liens or encumbrances on the property existing at the time the lien attaches,⁵ on the making of the contract,⁶ the commencement of the building,⁷ or of the performance of the labor or the furnishing of the materials,⁸ or the filing of the notice of lien⁹

Extent of priority Under some statutes, and the construction placed thereon, a prior lien has preference over a mechanic's lien as to the land,¹⁴ but the mechanic's lien has preference as to the improvement,¹⁵ at least in the case of the erection of a new building.¹⁶ However, a materialman has no right to a lien on a building superior to prior liens on the land except as given him by statute,¹⁷ and under some statutes the precedence of a materialman's lien on the improvements does not extend to an improvement, alteration, repair, or reconstruction of a building standing when the encumbrance was created,¹⁸ or at least in the case of inseparable repairs or improvements, a mechanic's and materialman's lien is subordinate to anterior liens or encumbrances on the property in the condition in which it was before such repairs or improvements were made,¹⁹ and is superior to such liens or encumbrances to the extent only that the added repairs or improvements enhanced its market value.²⁰

Loss of priority; waiver or subordination A mechanic's lien claimant may lose the priority which he would otherwise have over other liens or encumbrances by failing to perfect his own lien,²¹ or by waiving or subordinating his lien to that of subsequent lienors.²² Mechanics or materialmen who subordinate or waive the priority of their liens to the lien of a mortgage have been held thereby to subordinate their liens to other liens having priority over the mortgage,²³ but such subordination or waiver does not advance liens which are subordinate to the mortgage.²⁴

- a. In general
- b. Loss of priority, waiver or estoppel
- c. Extent of priority

a. In General

A vendor's lien is generally superior to a mechanic's lien for improvements made on the property by the vendee, unless the vendor required the making of the improvement.

A lien for the purchase price of real property ordinarily is superior to a mechanic's lien for improvements made on the property by the vendee,²⁵

unless the vendor required or authorized the making of the improvement,²⁶ or, under some statutes, unless the improvements were made for the vendee with the written consent of the vendor,²⁷ and mere knowledge on the part of the vendor that the vendee is making or is about to make improvements on the premises is not sufficient to give the lien of laborers or materialmen priority over the vendor's lien.²⁸ On the other hand, it has been held that, where property is sold after commencement of the furnishing of materials and labor, and liens for material and labor are recorded within the time prescribed by law, the privileges resulting are superior in rank to the vendor's lien resulting from the sale of the property within the period allowed for the recordation of such liens.²⁹

until the purchase price is paid, the right, lien, or equity of the seller is superior to a mechanic's lien subsequently filed,³⁰ provided the contract is filed or recorded, as required by statute,³¹ prior to a change of the status of the property from chattels to real property.³²

b. Loss of Priority; Waiver or Estoppel

A vendor may by waiver, estoppel, or failure to take proper steps preclude himself from claiming priority over a mechanic's lien.

A vendor may waive his lien in favor of a mechanic's lien,³³ or, by his acts or conduct, estop himself from asserting it.³⁴ The effect of a written waiver whereby a vendor subordinates his lien to subsequent encumbrances must be tested by the language used,³⁵ and, where the vendor has prescribed in precise terms the kind of a lien which should be prior to his vendor's lien, a subsequent mechanic's

Method of creating vendor's lien

(1) It is generally held that a vendor's lien is superior to that of a mechanic whether the vendor executes a bond for title, or a deed retaining a lien on its face, or executes a joint instrument with his vendee, by which he conveys title to the vendee and the latter, in turn, conveys the property by mortgage or deed of trust to secure the purchase money, or where, contemporaneous with the delivery of the deed, the vendee delivers a deed of trust or mortgage to secure the unpaid purchase money—Prichard Bros v Causey, 12 S W 2d 711, 158 Tenn 53

(2) Where land was conveyed under contract granting permission to purchaser to erect a building thereon, which should be security for purchase price, and price was not paid, vendor did not continually remain the real owner of the land so as to be unable to possess a vendor's lien superior to mechanics' liens which attached by reason of the erection of the building—F C Krotter Co v Harbaugh, 280 N W 211, 66 S D 178

Vendor as "bona fide prior encumbrancer"

Vendor, retaining title for security, is "bona fide prior encumbrancer" within statute giving such encumbrancer priority over mechanics' lien—Big Sioux Lumber Co v Miller, 234 N W. 31, 57 S D 506

Improvement as integral part of building

Plaintiff was held not entitled to enforce a mechanic's lien for material furnished in improvement of building, as against holder of vendor's lien, where improvement became an integral part of the building, and could not be removed without damage to the realty—Joyce Lumber Co v Wick, 205 N W 476, 200 Iowa 796

Vendor's interest as subject to lien under contract of sale providing for improvements see supra § 194

Withdrawal of consent

Vendor's purchase-money lien was held superior to lien for material, notwithstanding vendor had consented to acquisition of material for erection of improvements, where vendor withdrew such consent before material was furnished and agreed to indemnify materialman on certain conditions with which materialman did not comply—T. W Spinks Co v. Pachoud Bros, 92 S W 2d 50, 263 Ky 119

Permission only

Under a statute in effect giving priority to the mechanic's lienor only where the contract of sale requires the purchaser to improve the land, a vendor's lien is not subordinate to a lien for materials used in the erection of a building where the purchaser was merely given permission but was not required, to erect the building—F C Krotter Co v Harbaugh, 280 N W 211, 66 S D 178

lien which is not of the character, form, or substance prescribed in the waiver will not obtain priority³⁶ Failure of a materialman to give a statutory notice to the holder of the vendor's lien may deprive the materialman's lien of priority over the lien of the vendor³⁷

Failure to record deed or vendor's lien It has been held that a materialman dealing with a vendee is charged with notice of a vendor's lien reserved in the deed, notwithstanding the deed was not recorded³⁸ However, the failure to record a vendor's lien has been held to render it subordinate to a mechanic's lien,³⁹ and a mechanic's lien is entitled to priority where the work or labor is begun or the material furnished prior to the recording of the vendor's lien.⁴⁰

Improper filing of mechanic's lien. A lien claimant, by filing his claim against one who is not the record owner, cannot prejudice the rights of a vendor who relies on the faith of clear public records and properly records his vendor's lien against the record owner.⁴¹

Under some statutes a vendor's lien has priority only as to the land and improvements thereon at the time of the inception of the mechanic's lien, the mechanic's lien having priority as to the new improvement.

Under some statutes a vendor's lien has priority only as to the land and improvements thereon at the time of the inception of the mechanic's lien,⁴² the mechanic's lien having priority as to the new improvement.⁴³ Under other statutes, the vendor's lien has priority not only as to the land,⁴⁴ but also as to the building erected thereon,⁴⁵ and a mechanic's lien has no priority in respect of the enhanced value of the property arising from the erection of the building.⁴⁶

Homesteads. It has been held that a vendor's lien on a homestead is superior to a subsequent mechanic's lien on the homestead, at least where the improvements placed on the property are not removable without injury to the property;⁴⁷ but, where a separate and distinct building was erected on property constituting a homestead, and the building was removable without injury to the remainder of the property, and the mechanic's lienor complied with constitutional and statutory provisions relating to the creation of a materialman's lien for improvements, the mechanic's lien was held superior,

Priority of mechanics' liens, as to improvements alone, over existing mortgages see supra § 205 c

Liberal construction of statute

A statute giving priority to laborers and materialmen with respect to the building, over existing liens or encumbrances, should be liberally construed so as to afford to the laborers and materialmen the greatest protection compatible with justice and equity—Pacific Spruce Corporation v. Oregon Portland Cement Co., 286 P 520, 133 Or 223, 72 A.L.R. 1507, rehearing denied 289 P 489, 133 Or 223, 72 A.L.R. 1507.

Duty to assert lien on building alone

In materialman's action for enforcement of his lien as superior to vendor's lien, where mechanic's lien attached by reason of erection of building on land, duty was on materialman, in seeking to have building severed from land and sold separately to satisfy his lien, to assert a lien on the building alone as distinguished from the land—F. C. Krotter Co. v. Harbaugh, 280 N.W. 211, 66 S.D. 178

In Texas

(1) It has been held that, where the improvement is of a permanent character and is incapable of being separated from the land without destroying the improvement itself and damaging the freehold, the whole property may be sold, and the proceeds prorated according to the proportion which the fair market value of the land without the improvement and the improvement alone respectively bear to the value of the whole property—Land Mortg. Bank v. Quanah Hotel Co., 34 S.W. 730, 89 Tex 332—40 C.J. p 288 note 3.

(2) In other cases, however, it has been held that, where a vendor's lien is created prior to a mechanic's lien covering improvements which are not removable without serious injury, the vendor's lien is entitled to priority over the mechanic's lien as to both the improvement and the land—Cameron County Lumber Co. v. Al & Lloyd Parker, Inc., 62 S.W. 2d 63, 122 Tex 487—Hammann v. H. J. McMullen & Co., 62 S.W. 2d 59, 122 Tex 476 with respect to the building, to a vendor's lien previously existing on the property⁴⁸

§ 209. — Lien for Supplies

A lien for supplies furnished to operate a plant is sometimes superior to a lien for materials furnished for original construction.

Under some statutes a lien for supplies furnished for the operation of a manufacturing plant is prior to a mechanic's lien for materials furnished for original construction⁴⁹

§ 210. Between Mechanic's Lien and Other Claims, Interests, or Rights

Under some statutes, a mechanic's lien must be recorded in order to acquire priority over creditors without notice; but a creditor whose interest arises while construction is in progress is sometimes deemed to be a creditor with notice.

Under some statutes, a materialman's lien is acquired on real estate, as against creditors without notice, only from the time of the record of notice,⁵⁰ and the notice, in order to be effectual as against such creditors, must be filed within the time fixed by statute.⁵¹ A creditor of an owner of property whose interest arises while the construction or repair of the property is in progress is deemed, under the terms of some statutes, to be a creditor with notice of liens which have already attached to the property in favor of persons performing labor or furnishing materials for the construction of such building,⁵² the progress of such construction or repair is legal notice to the subsequent creditor even if such creditor in fact has no actual notice or knowledge of such construction or repair being in progress on the premises,⁵³ but a materialman cannot, under such a statute, preserve his lien, without record or actual notice, by leaving the building in an apparently finished condition⁵⁴ For the protection of those whose labor and material have brought a building into being, the law, in a proper case, may sever the building from the land, if need be, in working out priorities⁵⁵

Under some statutes the amount expended or obligation incurred by the owner to complete a building or any part thereof after the general contractor fails or refuses to do so is given priority over all mechanic's liens placed on the building by the general contractor, a subcontractor, or any person furnishing labor or materials used in the building⁵⁶ A mechanic's lien claimant has been held to have a lien on a leasehold and improvements thereon superior to the title of an assignor of the lease, under an assignment retaining title until full payment of specified sums, where the assignment further obligated the assignees to make the improvements for which the lien was claimed⁵⁷

Lien on money due contractor. If, before proper notice is served or filed by a subcontractor, workman, or materialman claiming a lien on funds due a contractor, other creditors pursuing the usual remedies for the collection of debts have acquired a legal or equitable right to have the debt applied in satisfaction of other claims, that right is not overreached by liens subsequently acquired,⁵⁸ unless priority is given by the provisions of the statute⁵⁹ Under some statutes the notice, in order to be operative and effective as against other persons claiming rights in the fund, must be given before the date when the final installment matures and falls due under the provisions of the contract,⁶⁰ and a stop notice served subsequent to the time of the maturity

a. By Contractor

Under some statutes, as respects funds due from the owner to the contractor, an assignee of the contractor has priority over a mechanic's lien filed after the assignment; but, under other statutes, a mechanic's lien claimant ordinarily has priority over an assignee of the contractor.

The rule, under some statutes, is that, where a notice or claim of lien is not filed within the time prescribed by law, or is served on the owner or filed after the contractor assigns his claim against the owner, the assignee has the prior right to the fund,⁶³ at least where the owner agrees to the assignment.⁶⁴ It is essential to the application of the rule that there be an assignment of a debt due the contractor,⁶⁵ that the assignment shall be valid,⁶⁶ and, where so required by statute, that it be filed⁶⁷ prior to the filing of the lien claim or notice.⁶⁸ On the other hand, the application of the rule is not affected by the fact that the owner knows that the subcontractors are unpaid;⁶⁹ that the consideration for the assignment is a debt not growing out of the construction of the building,⁷⁰ or that the assignee consented to materialmen and laborers furnishing materials and labor,⁷¹ or did not give the lien claimants notice of the assignment.⁷² Some courts hold that the rule is applicable notwithstanding a contractual obligation on the part of the contractor to protect or indemnify the owner against claims or liens of subcontractors.⁷³

Under the terms of some statutes the lien of a subcontractor, laborer, or materialman prevails over an assignment by the contractor,⁷⁴ even where the assignment is made or recorded before the service or filing of the mechanic's lien⁷⁵ or of a stop notice.⁷⁶ Certainly a subcontractor has a right prior

Liens or "claims"

Under some statutes an assignment by a contractor or subcontractor is subordinate only to liens of laborers, mechanics, and materialmen, and not to mere "claims" of such persons—Fairbanks, Morse & Co v Town of Cape Charles, 131 SE 437, 144 Va 56

Contractor's assignment of note and mechanic's lien

(1) Where a contractor having a note from the owner and a mechanic's lien on the property assigned the note and lien to one who, without notice of any claim of one asserting a laborer's or materialman's lien against the property, furnished material to the contractor and advanced money for his pay roll, the assignee was held to have a prior right to funds provided by the owner under the general contract—Modern Plumbing Co v Armstrong Bros. Tex Com App, 36 SW 2d 1011.

and superior to that of an assignee of the contractor where his lien is perfected prior to the date of the assignment.⁷⁷ Under some statutes, when the principal contractor assigns all sums due or to become due from the owner under the contract, the claims of persons furnishing the contractor labor and materials which are duly perfected before the owner has actually paid the balance due to the assignee are not defeated by the assignment.⁷⁸ An assignment by the contractor of money due from the owner has been held to have priority over the claims of laborers or materialmen who have failed to take the proper steps to keep their liens alive.⁷⁹

Order as assignment. An order given by the contractor on the owner payable out of what is due under the contract operates as an equitable assignment pro tanto of the fund within the meaning of the rule entitling the assignee to priority over liens subsequently perfected,⁸⁰ at least where the order has been accepted,⁸¹ or payment thereof has been guaranteed,⁸² by the owner, and even, it is held, where it has not been accepted by the owner.⁸³ Some courts hold that an order covering an amount to become due thereafter is within the rule,⁸⁴ but other courts hold that the right of the assignee is inferior to the right of a claimant who gives notice after the assignment but prior to the time when the demand assigned was due.⁸⁵ A draft, bill of exchange, or other order drawn by the contractor on the owner, payable generally and not out of the particular fund, is not an equitable assignment, and will not affect lien claimants who perfect their liens before the fund has been depleted by actual payment of the order therefrom.⁸⁶

Homestead Where the building was intended as a homestead, and the holders of mechanics' liens possessed knowledge sufficient to put them on inquiry as to the intended use of the property, their claims were not entitled to priority in the appropriation of a balance due on the original contract which the owner had deposited in court, as against a claim under the original contract by an assignee who had completed the building in accordance with its terms.⁸⁷

b. By Subcontractor

Where a subcontractor assigns funds due him from the contractor, the assignee has priority over one who subsequently files or acquires a lien for work or materials furnished to the subcontractor.

Where a subcontractor assigns the whole or a part of the amount due or to become due him from the contractor, his assignee is entitled to priority over one who subsequently files a lien notice or claim for work done for, or materials furnished to, the subcontractor,⁸⁸ unless the assignment was not filed, as required by statute,⁸⁹ or, in a jurisdiction in which the lien, when perfected, relates back to the date when claimant began to perform labor or to furnish materials, as discussed supra § 181, unless it was subsequent to the beginning of work or the furnishing of materials by claimant.⁹⁰

Claims against the estate of a decedent may be inferior to a mechanic's lien on property of the decedent, provided the mechanic's lienor has properly filed or enforced his lien.

Where the proceeds of a house and lot of a decedent are in the hands of his administrator for distribution, the claim of a contractor under the foreclosure of his lien for work done on such house and materials furnished therefor will take precedence of a claim of the widow on account of a debt for trust funds.⁹¹ Sometimes a mechanic's lien is denied priority over the claims of other creditors of a decedent where the lienor has not filed his lien⁹² or taken steps to enforce it,⁹³ at or within a specified time.

§ 213. — Promissory Note

Mechanics' lienors have been held to have priority over the rights of a third person holding an accommodation note given by a contractor to a subcontractor.

An accommodation note given by a contractor to a subcontractor, in the hands of a third person to whom it has been transferred, has been held not prior to the rights of lienors in the real property⁹⁴

§ 214. — Rights or Claims Asserted in Receivership

A mechanic's lien, under some circumstances, has a prior claim on funds in the hands of a receiver.

A laborer may, depending on the circumstances, be entitled to a lien on funds in the hands of a receiver prior to the claims of other creditors⁹⁵ Where a receiver has been appointed for the contractor, and his receivership perfected before a subcontractor or materialman files his notice of lien, the rights of the receiver are superior and prior to the rights of the lien claimant, at least in a jurisdiction where a mechanic's lien does not attach until the filing of the notice of lien.⁹⁶ Claims of laborers employed by a receiver will be held prior to a receivers' certificate where the certificate has been issued subject to expenses,⁹⁷ or where accorded priority by statute⁹⁸ Where mechanics' liens are superior to receivers' certificates but inferior to first mortgage liens, and the latter liens are waived in favor of the certificates, such certificates come in ahead of mechanics' liens⁹⁹

§ 215. — Rights of Sureties Completing Contract

A surety who completes the contract after default of the contractor ordinarily stands in the shoes of the contractor, as far as concerns the question of priorities

Where, on default of the contractor, his surety, as such and in order to protect himself from liability under his contract of suretyship, completes the contract, he stands in the shoes of the contractor¹ and is entitled to the balance due only after all valid mechanics' liens are satisfied² On the other hand, where the surety completes the work under an agreement with the owner, he has a right, superior to that of mechanic's lien claimants, in a fund which the owner might have applied in completing the building if he had completed it himself³

§ 216. Of Inchoate Lien

In some jurisdictions, but not in others, an inchoate mechanic's lien may be assigned so as to invest the assignee with the right to perfect and enforce the same.

utory provisions, it is held that an inchoate mechanic's lien may be assigned so as to invest the assignee with the right to perfect and enforce the same,⁴ in the same manner and to the same extent

In Texas

(1) In some early cases it was indicated that the right to a lien was as the assignor might have done;⁵ but in other jurisdictions the right to acquire a lien in the present or future is held to be a personal one⁶ and not assignable.⁷

§ 217. — Nature, Subject Matter, and Purpose of Assignment or Transfer

Where an inchoate mechanic's lien is assignable, an assignment ordinarily carries with it the right to perfect and enforce the lien; but, where an inchoate lien is not assignable, no such right is vested in the assignee.

In jurisdictions where an inchoate mechanic's lien is assignable the mere assignment of a lienable claim will carry with it the right to perfect and enforce a lien.⁸ In jurisdictions where an unperfected lien is not assignable, however, while lienable claims may of course be assigned,⁹ provided there is a compliance with such statutory requirements relating to filing as are applicable,¹⁰ and the assignee will take title to the claim or debt,¹¹ the assignment, when made before perfection of the lien, carries with it no lien¹² and no right to perfect,¹³ enforce,¹⁴ or assert¹⁵ a lien

An absolute assignment by a lien claimant of the amount due him has been held to deprive him of the right of subsequently filing a lien statement,¹⁶ unless there has been a reassignment,¹⁷ and, in jurisdictions where an assignment of the claim before perfection of the lien confers no rights in respect of the lien on the assignee, such assignment destroys the right to a lien¹⁸ On the other hand, the rule obtaining in some jurisdictions that the right to acquire a lien is destroyed by an assignment not assignable—Carlile v Harris, Civ.App., 38 S W 2d 633—Muscogee First Nat Bank v Campbell, 58 S W 628, 21 Tex Civ App 160

(2) However, in a later case it was stated that the holding in these cases was not necessary to the decision thereof, and, noting the conflict among the authorities, it was held that the authorities supporting the theory that the assignee acquires the right to perfect and enforce the lien present the better reasoning—Corpus Juris cited in Southern Surety Co of New York v First State Bank, Civ App., 54 S W 2d 888, 890

(3) In another case it was held that, when building on homestead was completed, assignment of lien dated back as of date of inception—Gravin v Armstrong Bros, Civ App., 30 S W 2d 353, modified on other grounds Modern Plumbing Co v Armstrong Bros, Com App., 36 S W 2d 1011

thereof does not apply to an assignment made to enable the assignee to sue.¹⁹ Likewise, the right to create a lien may be assigned where the assignment is made for the benefit of the assignor, and to be held by the assignee as his agent, so that the lien may be preserved.²⁰ The mere giving of an order on the debtor which is never presented, accepted, or paid does not defeat the right to a lien.²¹ An assignment of the claim as collateral security does not deprive the assignor of the right of subsequently filing a lien statement²² and enforcing the lien in his own name as discussed infra § 218. Also, a contractor may file his notice of lien after assigning a note taken by him for the amount due.²³

Assignment of contract; change in personnel of contractor Where a building contract is assigned, and the assignee continues the work under the contract with the owner's consent and approval, a novation is made and the assignee may enforce a mechanic's lien and include all labor and materials supplied by him whether before or after the assignment of the contract.²⁴ A change in the personnel of the contracting firm does not destroy the right to a lien for what was done or furnished pursuant to the contract,²⁵ a member of a firm who acquires the interests of his partner does not stand simply in the position of an assignee,²⁶ and the rule obtaining in some jurisdictions that the right to create a lien cannot be assigned is not applicable.²⁷ However, the fact that a contractor, after making the contract, entered into a partnership with another person, who is the legal successor of the firm, has been held not to authorize such person to file a lien under the contract between the contractor and owner to which he was a stranger.²⁸

§ 218. — In Whose Name Lien Perfected and Enforced

Some authorities permit the assignee of an inchoate lien to perfect and enforce the lien in his own name, while other authorities require the lien to be perfected and enforced in the name of the assignor.

According to some authorities the assignee of a lienable claim may perfect a lien in his own name,²⁹ but other cases hold that the lien should be perfected in the name of the assignor.³⁰ So, also, some authorities hold that, where the right to the lien has been assigned, an action to enforce the lien may be brought in the name of the real party in interest,³¹ while others require the lien to be enforced in the name of the assignor for the benefit of the assignee.³²

Where the claim has been assigned as collateral security, the assignor may enforce the lien in his own name,³³ especially where the claim has been re-assigned to the assignor for the purpose of enabling him to register it.³⁴ Where there has been a change in the personnel of the contracting firm, it has been variously held that the lien may and should be perfected and enforced in the firm name,³⁵ the names of the original partners,³⁶ or the names of the successors.³⁷

Assignment of contract. Where a building contract is assigned before completion, and completed by the assignee, the latter may file and enforce a lien in his own name if the effect of the assignment was to substitute him as original contractor, and the owner consented to such substitution,³⁸ but, if the assignee completed the contract merely as representing the original contractor, without being substituted for him, the lien has been held properly perfected and enforced in the name of the assignor for the benefit of the assignee³⁹

§ 219. Of Perfected Lien

Generally, a perfected mechanic's lien is assignable and passes as an incident with assignment of the debt which it secures.

It is well established as a general rule that after a mechanic's lien has been perfected by filing the necessary papers, it may be assigned⁴⁰. A perfected mechanic's lien passes as an incident with the assignment of the demand for which it stands as security⁴¹. Indeed, the lien cannot be effectively assigned without an assignment of the debt⁴². No particular words are necessary to constitute an assignment of the lien claim,⁴³ and, if the intent of the parties to effect an assignment is clearly expressed, this is sufficient to accomplish the purpose,⁴⁴ although, where the statutes of the particular jurisdiction require the assignment to be made in a particular way, there must be a compliance therewith⁴⁵. According to some authorities an assignment of the lien must be in writing,⁴⁶ but it has also been held that the lien may be assigned by parol⁴⁷. As in the case of written assignments generally, as discussed

Wrong name of assignee

Where, in a mechanic's lien foreclosure suit, brought by the "Construction Finance Corporation" as the contractor's assignee, a defendant sought to take advantage of the fact that what purported to be the written assignment of the contract was made to the "Contractors' Finance Corporation," but there was testimony that it was to complainant, "Construction Finance Corporation," that the assignment actually was made, and complainant offered in evidence a note for the amount due under the contract, signed by the owners of the property who had entered into the contract, it was held that it was apparent that there was a mere error in the assignment—Construction Finance Corporation v Kawohl, 274 Ill. In California

(1) In an early case, the court followed the rule that the assignment must be in writing—Ritter v Stevenson, 7 Cal. 388

(2) However, in a later case it was held that an oral assignment was valid, and the earlier case was held inconsistent with later decisions covering mortgage liens and at variance with the principle that a lien is but an incident of the debt and follows a valid assignment of the debt—Union Supply Co v Morris, 30 P.2d 394, 230 Cal. 331, followed in Mitchell v Shoreridge Oil Co, 75 P.2d 110, 24 Cal. App. 382

(3) A finding that the claim was transferred and assigned imports, in the absence of anything to show the contrary, that the court found on sufficient evidence that the claim was assigned in writing—Patent Brick Co v. Moore, 16 P. 890, 75 Cal. 205.

in Assignments § 56, a written assignment of a mechanic's lien is not effective unless,⁴⁸ and until,⁴⁹ it is delivered.

§ 220. — In Whose Name Lien Enforced

The assignee of a perfected mechanic's lien may bring an action to enforce the lien in his own name in some jurisdictions, but in others it has been held that the lien may and should be enforced in the assignor's name.

According to some authorities the assignee of a perfected lien may enforce the lien in his own name,⁵⁰ but it has also been held that the lien may⁵¹ and should⁵² be enforced in the name of the assignor, at least where he is the real party in interest⁵³. Thus, where the lien has been transferred as collateral security, it has been held that the assignor may enforce the lien in his own name⁵⁴.

However, an assignee for collection has been held the proper person to foreclose the lien, since he was the legal owner⁵⁵.

§ 221. Rights of Assignee

Ordinarily, an assignee of a mechanic's lien obtains only those rights possessed by the assignor at the time of the assignment, and he is subject to all equities and defenses existing against the assignor at the time of the assignment.

The assignee of a mechanic's lien occupies the same position as the assignor,⁵⁶ having the same rights,⁵⁷ and being subject to the same equities,⁵⁸ conditions,⁵⁹ and defenses⁶⁰. Hence, he can enforce no lien where the assignor was not entitled to a lien,⁶¹ as where the contract has not been performed to such an extent as to give rise to a lien.⁶²

Neither can the assignee enforce a lien where, prior to the assignment, the assignor waived his right to a lien⁶³ or was estopped to assert it⁶⁴

Payments made by the owner to the assignor after the assignment, but in good faith and without notice thereof, may be set off against the assignee,⁶⁵ and, where the assignment is invalid, the fact that payments were made with notice thereof is immaterial,⁶⁶ but an owner who, after the termination of the original building contract without the fault of the builder, and after the latter had commenced an action to foreclose his mechanic's lien and had assigned the lien and cause of action, but without knowledge of the assignment, entered into a new contract with the assignor with respect to the same subject matter, is not entitled to set off against the assignee any damages arising out of the assignor's failure to perform the new contract⁶⁷ After a claim and the right to a mechanic's lien therefor have been assigned, the rights of the assignee cannot be affected by any statement made by the assignor in a petition to be declared a bankrupt,⁶⁸ unless such statement is ratified by the assignee⁶⁹

The bona fide purchaser or assignee of a simulated mechanic's lien on a homestead may enforce the lien,⁷² provided he is an innocent purchaser before maturity.⁷³ The purchaser is not entitled to enforce the lien, however, where he is not a purchaser for value without notice of its invalidity,⁷⁴ or where there has not been substantial performance of the contract.⁷⁵

VI. WAIVER, DISCHARGE, RELEASE, AND SATISFACTION

A. WAIVER OF RIGHT TO LIEN

The right to a mechanic's lien may be waived.

The principle that a person of full age and acting sui juris can waive a statutory or even a constitutional provision in his own favor, affecting simply his property or alienable rights and not involving considerations of public policy, applies to mechanics' liens,⁷⁶ and when the lien has been once waived

Provision authorizing lien

Abandonment of contract

Where under arrangement between contractor and lender, lender was to furnish money to finance construction job, as between lender and parties assigning claim to him, the assignments were controlling, but as to other persons who had furnished labor and materials in construction of building and as to building funds paid into court by owner after contractor had abandoned contract, the lender was not entitled to lien against funds or building, but he was only entitled to a pro rata share.—Sadler v Glenn, 199 So 305, 190 Miss 112

"Where a general waiver is executed, and there is nothing in the context to show a contrary intention, there is nothing left for the court to do but to enforce the contract as the parties have made it"—Decatur Lumber & Mfg Co v Crail, 183 NE 228, 230, 350 Ill 319—Turner v Brackle, 94 NE 495, 496, 249 Ill 394

Claimed reservation as to use of waiver of mechanic's lien executed by subcontractor was of no effect unless it was brought to attention of bank which made construction payments prior to bank's payment to principal contractor for subcontractor of amount shown to be due to the subcontractor by sworn statement of the principal contractor—Gottesman v. United Sav Bank, 289 NW 250, 291 Mich 551.

Where materialman withdrew his claim for a mechanic's lien against one of two joint owners of property affected, his lien could not be upheld as to the interest of such joint owner—Dalbey Bros Lumber Co v Crispin, 12 NW 2d 277, 234 Iowa 151

87. Ill—Goldstein v. McAlonan, 17 NE 2d 993, 297 Ill App 643

giving up of a property right, but merely of an added remedy.⁸⁸ When a contractor waives his right to a lien, he thereby agrees to rely on his right to obtain a judgment at common law under the contract in case the owner defaults.⁸⁹ A waiver of a lien by a materialman has been held to remit him to his right to participate in any fund in the hands of the owner.⁹⁰ It has been held that a materialman waiving his lien cannot recover materials not attached to the freehold.⁹¹

Avoidance A waiver may be avoided for fraud or misrepresentation⁹² on showing that it is chargeable to the person for whose benefit the waiver was made⁹³ and that an offer was made to restore benefits received for its execution.⁹⁴

§ 223. What Constitutes in General

While a waiver of a mechanic's lien may be express or implied, an intention to waive must clearly appear.

In order to be effective a waiver must be supported by a consideration.

It has been said that the term "waiver of mechanic's lien" has by long usage become descriptive of a writing having the purpose and effect of releasing, according to its terms, the statutory right to a mechanic's lien.⁹⁵ A waiver of a mechanic's lien may be express,⁹⁶ or it may be implied or inferred⁹⁷ from acts,⁹⁸ conduct,⁹⁹ or the course of dealing between the parties.¹ What constitutes a waiver is essentially a question of intention,² in order to establish it the intention to waive must clearly appear.³ While a claimant will be held to have intended to do what an express waiver particularly states that he does do,⁴ a waiver of the lien will not be presumed or implied contrary to the intention of the party whose rights would be injuriously affected thereby,⁵ unless by his conduct the opposite party was misled to his prejudice into the honest belief that such waiver was intended or consented to.⁶

A waiver of a mechanic's lien must be supported by a consideration in order to be effective.⁷ Reliance and action on the waiver may be treated as a sufficient consideration,⁸ as where the owner, relying on the waiver, makes a payment to the contractor⁹ or does not give a notice of nonliability in the manner required by statute,¹⁰ or where a mortgagee pays the proceeds of the loan directly to the owner.¹¹ When authorized,¹² but not otherwise,¹³ a waiver by an agent is binding on the principal.

Applying these rules and principles, the courts have held various particular matters to constitute¹⁴ or not to constitute¹⁵ a waiver. Some courts hold that the submission to arbitration of the matters in dispute under a contract is a waiver of a right to a mechanic's lien,¹⁶ but other courts take the opposite view.¹⁷

- b Agreements as to payment

a. In General

The right to a mechanic's lien may be waived by an express or implied agreement.

The right to a mechanic's lien may be waived by contract or agreement¹⁸ between the person entitled to the lien and the owner¹⁹ or, except in some jurisdictions,²⁰ the principal contractor.²¹ It is essential to the application of the rule that an agreement to waive the lien shall have been made,²² that it shall not have been procured by fraud,²³ and that it shall relate to and cover the lien in question.²⁴ A party cannot properly set up as a waiver a contract containing mutual covenants with which he himself has failed or refused to comply.²⁵ Also, where a waiver by a materialman is contingent on the fulfillment of the contract between the owner and contractor, on nonperformance of that contract by the contractor the materialman is entitled to file a lien.²⁶ On the other hand, where the right to a mechanic's lien is absolutely waived by the contract, the binding effect of such waiver is not defeated by the owner's failure to comply with his own independent covenants and agreements.²⁷ Likewise the binding effect of a waiver contained in a subcontract is not obviated by a breach of contract by the contractor.²⁸

A mechanic's lien may be waived by an express contract or agreement²⁹ or, except in some jurisdictions,³⁰ by an implied agreement.³¹ Conversely, in order to constitute a waiver by contract, there must be an express covenant waiving the lien³² or a covenant resulting by implication from language so plain that a mechanic can so understand without seeking professional interpretation as to its legal effect.³³ Any agreement or stipulation which clearly shows that it is the intention of the parties that the right to a lien shall be waived is sufficient to accomplish the purpose,³⁴ but the contract must receive a reasonable construction.³⁵ In the absence of language indicating a purpose under no circumstances to claim a lien it is not to be supposed that the contractor intended absolutely to relinquish his right,³⁶ and where the terms of the contract are ambiguous the doubt should be resolved against the waiver.³⁷

A contract inconsistent with the existence, perfection, or enforcement of a mechanic's lien may operate as a waiver thereof,³⁸ but the right to a lien under a contract complete in itself is not waived by entering into another contract relating to a different subject matter.³⁹ Various specific contract provisions have been held not to operate as a bar or waiver of a mechanic's lien ⁴⁰

Application of general agreement to lien of contractor. The contractor waives his own lien where he expressly agrees not to file it,⁴¹ but the authorities are conflicting on the question whether the contractor waives his own lien by agreeing generally that no lien shall be filed, without expressly mentioning his own lien, some decisions holding that such an agreement amounts to a waiver of his lien⁴² while other decisions hold that it does not⁴³ and that it applies only to the liens of other persons ⁴⁴ It has been held that an agreement of the contractor to complete the building and deliver it to the owner free and clear of all liens, claims, or encumbrances does not amount to a waiver of his lien⁴⁵ and that the liens referred to are those of subcontractors and persons other than the contractor.⁴⁶ Also an agreement of the contractor to furnish a release from liens is not a waiver of his own lien,⁴⁷ but is merely an agreement to furnish releases from his subordinate contractors ⁴⁸

b. Agreements as to Payment

An agreement by a person entitled to a lien that he will look exclusively to the contractor or some person

other than the owner for the payment of his claim is a waiver of his right to a lien. Agreements with respect to the manner or time of payment will not affect a waiver unless the terms agreed on are inconsistent with the existence or enforcement of the lien.

An agreement by a person entitled to a lien that he will look exclusively to the contractor or some person other than the owner for the payment of his claim is a waiver of his right to a lien ⁴⁹ However, agreements with respect to the manner or time of payment will not effect a waiver of the lien unless the terms agreed on are inconsistent with the existence or enforcement of the lien ⁵⁰ A provision in the building contract that payment shall be made only on sufficient evidence that all claims on the building for work and materials are discharged is not a waiver of the contractor's right to a lien ⁵¹ The fact that the contract stipulates for a credit does not show a waiver of the lien⁵² unless the credit is inconsistent with its enforcement,⁵³ as where the time of payment is fixed at a date after the time within which proceedings to enforce the lien must be commenced ⁵⁴ Likewise an extension of the time of payment is not a waiver of the lien⁵⁵ unless the time for payment is extended by agreement beyond the time allowed for enforcing the lien ⁵⁶

§ 225. Action on Claim

As a general rule a mechanic's lien is not waived by bringing a personal action on the claim or account or recovering a personal judgment thereon.

As a general rule a mechanic's lien is not waived by bringing a personal action on the claim or account,⁵⁷ causing an attachment to be issued and levied on the property of the debtor for the same claim,⁵⁸ or recovering a personal judgment thereon.⁵⁹ These rules are subject to some limitations and exceptions.⁶⁰ In a few jurisdictions a person who recovers a personal judgment against the debtor cannot subsequently enforce the lien in another suit or proceeding,⁶¹ but this rule does not apply to a judgment rendered in the same proceeding⁶² or to a judgment in respect of a transaction totally distinct and disconnected from the transaction out of which the lien arises.⁶³ Of course, where a claimant obtains a judgment for the enforcement of his lien, the lien is not lost by waiver,⁶⁴ since there is no intent to waive.⁶⁵

(1) Taking

As a general rule a mechanic's lien claimant does not waive or forfeit his right to a lien merely by taking a promissory note of the owner or the contractor for what is due him.

It is well established as a general rule that a mechanic's lien claimant does not waive or forfeit his right to a lien merely by taking a promissory note of the owner or the contractor for what is due him,⁶⁶ the only effect of such a note is to suspend the right to enforce the lien until its maturity.⁶⁷ In order that the taking of a note may waive or extinguish the lien it is necessary and sufficient that it shall be received in payment,⁶⁸ or, at the time it is taken,⁶⁹ the parties shall agree,⁷⁰ intend,⁷¹ or understand⁷² that it shall have the effect of waiving or extinguishing the lien. These rules are expressly affirmed, in whole or in part, by the statutes of some jurisdictions⁷³

Where the note is taken on the express understanding that the mechanic's lien is to be reserved there is no waiver⁷⁴. An unaccepted tender of a promissory note does not deprive claimant of his lien⁷⁵ unless he has previously agreed to accept the note in payment;⁷⁶ and a mere agreement to accept a note will be no waiver of the lien where the agreement is broken by the refusal of the owner to give it,⁷⁷ even though the lien would be waived if the note had been given and accepted according to the agreement,⁷⁸ as where the agreement is to take the note in payment.⁷⁹ It has been held that the lien of a subcontractor will not be enforced where he has accepted from the contractor a note covering not only the demand in question but also sums due on other accounts⁸⁰

Showing as to taking in payment. In some jurisdictions the taking of a note is prima facie a payment of the account,⁸¹ and, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, it operates as a payment within the meaning of the rule that the lien is waived or lost by taking a note in payment of the debt.⁸² In other jurisdictions, however, it is not to be presumed that a note taken by a person entitled to a lien was taken as payment,⁸³ but it must be shown that such was the case.⁸⁴ Even in those jurisdictions, where the doctrine prevails that the acceptance of a negotiable promissory note is presumed, in the absence of any testimony or circumstances to the contrary, to be a payment of the indebtedness for which it was given, this presumption is overcome by the fact that the acceptance of a note in payment would deprive the creditor taking the note of the substantial benefit of some security.⁸⁵ The fact that the lienor on receiving a promissory note gave a receipt for the amount⁸⁶ or credited the amount on his books⁸⁷ does not conclusively establish that the note was taken in payment so as to defeat the lien, but is only a circumstance bearing on the question of whether or not it was so taken,⁸⁸ and such question is one of fact.⁸⁹

Time of maturity of note. The rule that the taking of the note is not a waiver of the lien applies where the note is payable within the time allowed by statute for commencing proceedings to enforce the lien,⁹⁰ but, where the note does not mature until after the expiration of that time, the lien is lost⁹¹ unless it is expressly agreed by the parties that the taking of the note shall not be construed as a waiver of the lien.⁹² Likewise the rule that the taking of a note is not a waiver of the lien applies where the note matures within the time allowed by statute for perfecting the lien,⁹³ and in some,⁹⁴ but not other,⁹⁵ jurisdictions it is held that the rule applies where the note matures within the time allowed for enforcing the lien, even though not until after the expiration of the time allowed for perfecting the lien, it being permissible for claimant to perfect his lien notwithstanding the note is not yet payable,⁹⁶ although he cannot enforce his lien until the money is payable.⁹⁷ Under a statute providing that suit to enforce the lien must be commenced within a certain time after the money became due and payable, it has been held that the acceptance of a note payable at a future day by a creditor claiming a mechanic's lien is an abandonment of the lien if by the terms of the note the time of the payment has been extended beyond the date as fixed by the original contract,⁹⁸ but if the note conforms to the terms of the original contract it is but a memorial of such contract and the lien is unaffected.⁹⁹ A mere agreement to accept notes maturing after the expiration of the period allowed for enforcing the lien is not a waiver of the lien where the notes are not given.¹

(2) Transfer

Ordinarily the mere transfer or negotiation of notes taken by the claimant does not defeat his right to a lien.

The transfer or negotiation of notes taken by claimant does not defeat his right to a lien,² at least where the note is indorsed back to,³ or taken up by,⁴ claimant so that it is in his possession and control at the commencement of the suit and he surrenders it in court at the hearing.⁵ However, one who has taken a note for his claim must, in order to enforce a mechanic's lien, produce the note on the trial for surrender to the maker or satisfactorily account for his failure to do so and show that the note is not in any event enforceable against the maker.⁶ Hence a claimant may, by so disposing of the note as to put it beyond his control, put himself in a position where he cannot comply with these conditions and hence cannot enforce his lien.⁷ Also his acts in this respect may give rise to the inference or presumption that he regarded the note as payment and waived his lien.⁸ A lienor's failure to surrender notes taken for his claim cannot be set up by a mortgagee claiming priority for his mortgage over mechanics' liens.⁹ It has been held that the proceeds of the note cannot be regarded as a credit reducing the amount of the lien where, because of the insolvency of the maker, claimant will be compelled to pay the note.¹⁰ Under such circumstances it is immaterial whether or not claimant has taken up the note.¹¹

b. Draft or Order

A claimant does not lose his right to a mechanic's lien by taking a bill, draft, or order unless there is an express agreement that the lien shall be waived.

A claimant does not lose his right to a mechanic's lien by taking a bill, draft, or order,¹² even though it is accepted¹³ and partial payment made thereon,¹⁴ unless there is an express agreement that the lien shall be waived¹⁵ or the draft or order was expressly received as payment.¹⁶ Also the lien is not waived or lost by the negotiation of a draft.¹⁷ is not a waiver of the lien unless expressly agreed or intended as such or the security is inconsistent with the existence or enforcement of the lien.

The decisions and statutes of the various jurisdictions differ as to the effect on a mechanic's lien of the taking of other security for the claim¹⁸ In some jurisdictions and under some statutes the rule is that a mechanic's lien is waived by taking any other security for the debt,¹⁹ but in other jurisdictions or under other statutes the taking of other security is not a waiver of the mechanic's lien²⁰ unless there is an express agreement to that effect,²¹ or such was the intention of the parties, or the security is inconsistent with the existence or enforcement of the lien²² Under some statutes the rule applicable is dependent on the time the security is taken, a mechanic's lien being denied to a person who takes collateral security at the time of the making of the contract or during the progress of the work,²³ but not to a person who takes security after the completion of the work or the accrual of the right to a lien,²⁴ unless by express agreement the security is given and received in lieu of the lien²⁵

The contract, promise, or property taken must have been intended and accepted as collateral security before the lien can be said to be waived or defeated by the taking thereof²⁶ It is generally,²⁷ but not always,²⁸ held that a mere agreement by a person entitled to a mechanic's lien to accept other security does not amount to a waiver of the lien where such agreement is not executed It has also been held that after collateral security has been taken it may be surrendered and the lien restored by agreement of the parties so as to be effectual against the owner²⁹ and persons acquiring rights in the property after the lien is filed³⁰

In accordance with these rules it has been held that the right to a mechanic's lien may be enforced notwithstanding the holder of the lien has taken a personal obligation from another for the payment of the debt for which the lien is claimed³¹ It has also been held that the fact that a third person has promised to pay the debt³² or has guaranteed its payment³³ does not defeat the lien. Where material was furnished to a tenant to make improvements on the landlord's farm, the fact that a materialman in the complaint to enforce a lien on the improvements alleged that the landlord was personally liable for the material did not amount to a waiver of the lien by taking collateral security therefor when before trial he dismissed his claim of personal liability against the landlord without prejudice³⁴ Receiving an assignment of policies of insurance on the building has been held not to be a waiver of the lien³⁵ The deposit of money as security may defeat the right to a lien³⁶ It has been held that the transfer of title to the property to the general contractor as security does not affect his right to a lien³⁷

Security for purchase money

Materialman had lien notwithstanding he held legal title to lots as security for purchase money due. —Bell v Koontz, 290 S.W. 597, 172 Ark. 370.

Note on which third person is maker, indorser, or surety It has been held that the lien is waived by accepting the note of a third person,³⁸ but there is also authority to the contrary.³⁹ Likewise there is authority both for⁴⁰ and against⁴¹ the proposition that the lien is waived by accepting a note of the debtor with a third person as joint maker, indorser, surety, or guarantor.

Retention of title to materials furnished Although the rule is otherwise under the statutes in some jurisdictions,⁴² ordinarily the fact that one who furnishes materials or machinery for improvements on land retains the title to the materials or machinery until they are paid for does not deprive him of the right to a mechanic's lien.⁴³ However, reasserting title to materials for which a lien is claimed and selling them to another person constitute a waiver of the lien.⁴⁴

b. Mortgage or Pledge

chanic's lien, there is also authority that a waiver does not result where the parties do not so intend and the rights of third persons are not infringed.

While it has been held that the lien is waived by taking a mortgage on the property subject to the mechanic's lien,⁴⁵ there is also authority holding that a waiver does not result⁴⁶ where the parties do not so intend⁴⁷ and the rights of third persons are not infringed.⁴⁸ It has been held that the lien is not waived by bringing an action to foreclose the mortgage, where the petition in the action is not simply to foreclose the mortgage, but states all the facts and demands judgment for the sum due, and the enforcement of the mechanic's lien substantially as though there had been no mortgage given.⁴⁹ Likewise there is a conflict of authority on the question whether the taking of a mortgage on other real property amounts to a waiver, some courts holding that it does⁵⁰ and others that it does not,⁵¹ where it was not intended that the mortgage should be in substitution or waiver of the lien.⁵² The taking of a chattel mortgage does not amount to a waiver of the lien,⁵³ but it has been held that the lien is

§ 228. Persons Entitled to Set Up Waiver

Waivers of mechanics' liens which are addressed generally "to whom it may concern" may be relied on and enforced by the owner of the property or bondholders.

Waivers of mechanics' liens which are addressed generally "to whom it may concern" are a representation to anyone interested in the premises⁵⁵ and may be relied on and enforced by the owner of the property⁵⁶ or by bondholders⁵⁷. The owner may avail himself of a waiver although it is directed to a building association, since there is no valid objection to the building association acting on behalf of the owner, as well as on its own account, in receiving the waiver⁵⁸. A holder of a mortgage lien on the property may accept and enforce an unconditional waiver of a mechanic's lien⁵⁹. A waiver on the part of a subcontractor is available to both the owner⁶⁰ and the contractor⁶¹. The acts of a person or his agent are sometimes such that he has no standing in equity to claim a waiver.⁶²

B ESTOPPEL TO CLAIM LIEN

As a general rule a person entitled to a mechanic's lien may be estopped to assert or enforce it by any act which will render it inequitable for him to do so.

As a general rule a person entitled to a mechanic's lien may be estopped to assert or enforce it⁶³ in equity by any act which will render it inequitable for him to do so⁶⁴. Of course, the facts in particular cases may not be such as to give rise to an estoppel,⁶⁵ and the fact that claimant may be estopped to enforce his lien to the prejudice of a third person does not necessarily show that he is estopped to enforce it against the owner,⁶⁶ especially where the owner was a party to, and reaped the benefit of, the acts which gave rise to the estoppel against the third person⁶⁷. The statements or acts of a lienor cannot estop him to claim a lien as against the owner where the latter was not misled or induced to change his position thereby,⁶⁸ as where he had no knowledge of the matters claimed to constitute the estoppel⁶⁹.

action of trover for part of the goods sold cannot thereafter foreclose a mechanic's lien for the remainder of the goods.⁷⁰ A person who alleges or admits in his pleadings that he has no lien is estopped to claim a lien as against the owner who, as garnishee, paid out funds which he would have been entitled to retain to satisfy the lien claim if it had been asserted.⁷¹ On the other hand, it has been held that the facts that a contractor sued for the contract price before the last payment was due under the contract, and recovered judgment for the amount due him, do not estop him, in subsequent proceedings to perfect his mechanic's lien, to claim that his whole account was not due at the date of bringing his first suit.⁷²

As against purchaser A person is estopped to assert a lien as against an innocent purchaser where, knowing that a sale was to take place, he failed to give the prospective purchaser any notice or information of his intent to claim a lien.⁷³ A contractor or a materialman is estopped to assert his mechanic's lien to the prejudice of persons whom he has induced to believe that his debt has been satisfied, or that he will claim no lien, and who in that belief have purchased the property on which the lien rests.⁷⁴ It has been held, however, that a mere random statement that the lien was satisfied, made without any fraudulent intent to one who, so far as the lienor knew or had reason to know, had no present or prospective interest in the matter, will not estop the lienor to assert his lien although the person to whom the statement is made purchases the property in reliance on the statement.⁷⁵ It has also been held that an expression of opinion on a question of law, as to the legal effect of a bond given to discharge a mechanic's lien, does not operate as an estoppel against the lienor in favor of a purchaser of the property.⁷⁶ There is no estoppel against a purchaser who has not been misled or deceived as to any material fact.⁷⁷

As against other claimants or creditors. In particular cases the facts have been such as to estop⁷⁸ or not to estop⁷⁹ a person to assert a mechanic's lien as against other claimants or creditors.

§ 230. By Knowledge, Representations, or Directions as to Payment

A subcontractor, materialman, or laborer is estopped to assert a mechanic's lien where the owner has settled with the contractor, or made payments to the contractor or subcontractors, in reliance on a representation, statement, or direction by the subcontractor, materialman, or laborer that he has been paid.

A subcontractor, materialman, or laborer is estopped to assert a lien where the owner has settled with the contractor, or made payments to the contractor or other subcontractors, in reliance on the subcontractor's, materialman's, or laborer's receipt for the amount due him,⁸⁰ his statement that he has been paid by the contractor,⁸¹ his representation that he will not look to the owner for payment of work performed or materials furnished,⁸² or his direction,⁸³ authorization,⁸⁴ or expressed desire.⁸⁵

that payment be made to the contractor. The estoppel created by the foregoing matters is coextensive with the amount of money paid by the owner in reliance thereon,⁸⁶ but does not extend to money paid prior to the making of the statement or representation.⁸⁷

On the other hand, no estoppel will arise from the subcontractor's statements or representations where the owner in making payment is not misled thereby,⁸⁸ and, in the absence of any act, failure to act, or statement on the part of claimant inducing payment to the contractor, mere knowledge on his part of matters relating to payment to the contractor does not create an estoppel,⁸⁹ especially where he is without authority to prevent payment.⁹⁰

§ 231. Of Party to Indemnity Bond

There is authority both affirming and denying that a contractor waives, or is estopped to assert, his own right to a lien where he gives a bond that no mechanic's lien shall be filed or that he will protect the owner against such liens.

There is authority both affirming⁹¹ and denying⁹² that a contractor waives, or is estopped to assert, his own right to a mechanic's lien where he gives a bond that no lien shall be filed on the building or that he will protect the owner against such liens. The denial, however, has been held to be limited to cases where the amount agreed to be paid by the obligee of the bond has not been fully paid.⁹³ So also it has been held in some jurisdictions that a surety on a contractor's bond is not entitled to enforce a lien in his own behalf as subcontractor or materialman⁹⁴ unless he has been in some way discharged from his contract of suretyship,⁹⁵ while other courts hold that a surety is not estopped to enforce a lien,⁹⁶ although on his attempting to do so the owner may interpose claimant's liability under the bond as a set-off or counterclaim.⁹⁷ In jurisdictions where the latter rule prevails a surety cannot enforce a lien for an amount in excess of the contract price⁹⁸ or the balance which remains due and unpaid,⁹⁹ and where the full contract price has been paid the surety cannot enforce any lien.¹ Whatever waiver or estoppel may exist because of the bond does not extend to work done under a new contract and not covered by the bond.² A partnership is not prevented from asserting a lien for labor or materials furnished by the firm merely because one of the partners, solely in his individual capacity, is a surety on the contractor's bond.³

Guarantor or indemnitor of surety. A guarantor of the surety in the contractor's bond cannot enforce a lien as subcontractor.⁴ Likewise a contractor who gives a bond indemnifying a surety against any loss or damage which may be sustained because of a bond given by the surety to protect the owner from mechanics' liens waives his right to assert a lien on his own behalf.⁵ However, sureties on a bond given by the contractor to another surety to indemnify the latter from liability as surety on the contractor's

C BOND OR DEPOSIT TO PREVENT OR DISCHARGE LIEN

§ 232. Bond or Undertaking in General

Some statutes make provision for the execution and filing of a bond or undertaking to prevent or discharge mechanics' liens

Some statutes provide for the execution and filing of a bond or undertaking to prevent or discharge mechanics' liens,⁷ and for the use of persons in whose favor liens might accrue.⁸ A general statute providing that, where an undertaking has been given in any action or proceeding, the court may, in its discretion and if justice so requires, order further or other security to be given in addition to such security, does not apply to an undertaking given to effect a discharge of a mechanic's lien.⁹

§ 233. Deposit in Court in General

Under some statutes a mechanic's lien may be discharged by the owner depositing in court an amount sufficient to satisfy the claim. Under other statutes a bond to cover any costs or interest that may be awarded by a judgment for the claim is required in addition to the deposit.

Under some statutes a mechanic's lien may be discharged by the owner depositing in court an amount sufficient to satisfy the claim¹⁰ or the balance due from him to the contractor.¹¹ An offer to pay such an amount into court must follow the language of the statute or it will be ineffectual.¹² The money deposited stands in place of the lien,¹³ but the payment into court is not an acknowledgment of claimant's right¹⁴ or a waiver of defenses,¹⁵ and a claimant is not entitled to receive, or share in, the amount deposited until he has established his claim and lien.¹⁶

In some jurisdictions the proper method of determining the right of claimant to share in the money deposited is to commence and maintain an action in form the same as one to foreclose the lien,¹⁷ although no sale of the premises can be ordered therein,¹⁸ but in other jurisdictions a different procedure is adopted.¹⁹ It has been held that, where the owner has deposited in court the amount due from him to the contractor, the costs arising from

Purpose of bonding recorded claims

(1) It has been held that the purpose of legislative acts relating to the bonding of recorded claims by contractors was to provide a method by which contractors on private works by substituting surety bonds in lieu of liens recorded against their work might obtain the release of funds held by owners to meet the claims secured by the liens—State ex rel Pittman Bros Const Co v Watson, 6 So 2d 709, 199 La 623

(2) It has also been held that the purpose of such acts was to enable clerks of courts to erase inscriptions of liens from mortgage records and to issue clear lien certificates on being furnished with surety bonds—State ex rel Pittman Bros Const Co v Watson, supra

subsequent litigation with respect to the allowed claim should be deducted from the amount deposited before distribution to the persons entitled to liens²⁰

A deposit in court, followed by a withdrawal thereof, does not discharge the lien,²¹ and, when a judgment on plaintiff's default is vacated and the action is reinstated, the moneys which were on deposit to discharge the lien, and which were withdrawn by defendant after judgment, should be re-deposited.²² The money deposited is to be repaid the depositor when the lien is discharged under other provisions of the statute,²³ as where it terminates by lapse of time.²⁴

Deposit and bond Under some statutes a mechanic's lien may be discharged by depositing the amount of the lien claim and filing a bond to cover any attorney's fees, court costs, and interest that may be adjudged against the owner in the event that the lien claimant recovers judgment on claim in the amount for which it was filed.²⁵ The owner does not acknowledge the claimant's right²⁶ or waive any defenses²⁷ by making the deposit and filing the bond. The deposit may not be withdrawn by the owner before the lien claim is finally adjudicated.²⁸

§ 234. Who May Give Security

Who may give the bond for the prevention or discharge of a mechanic's lien is a matter of statutory regulation.

The statutes of different jurisdictions relating to the prevention or discharge of mechanics' liens by the giving of a bond or undertaking variously provide in terms for the giving of the bond or undertaking by any person having an interest in the property,²⁹ defendant,³⁰ the principal contractor,³¹ or either the owner or the contractor.³²

§ 235. Time for Giving Security

Under some statutes the bond for the prevention or discharge of a mechanic's lien may be given and filed at any time after the making of the contract.

Under some statutes the bond for the prevention or discharge of a mechanic's lien may be given and filed at any time after the making of the contract,³³ and it need not be filed before, but may be filed after, the institution of a suit to enforce a lien.³⁴ Under other statutes, however, it has been held that an application to substitute security for the lien is too late when made after suit has been commenced and the case is ready for trial.³⁵ Some statutes require the bond to be recorded within a specified number of days after its approval.³⁶

§ 236. Form, Requisites, and Validity of Bond

quirements,³⁷ but although it does not do so,³⁸ or although it is given at a time when no statute authorizing a discharge of a lien by the giving of a bond is in force,³⁹ it may be valid and binding as a common-law bond. A bond given pursuant to an unconstitutional statute is, however, void⁴⁰ and cannot be upheld as a common-law obligation.⁴¹ Where a single contract for an entire sum for the erection of one building on two lots is made and the building is constructed, the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien on the two lots cannot be defeated or discharged by the giving of a bond as to one lot only.⁴² A bond under seal given by the owner to dissolve a mechanic's lien conclusively imports a consideration.⁴³

Condition. Whatever condition is required or prescribed by statute must be inserted in the bond.⁴⁴ However, some statutes relating to a bond given after a bill in equity to enforce the lien has been brought do not prescribe the form of bond but leave it to the court, and under such statutes a condition which fully protects the rights of plaintiff is sufficient.⁴⁵

Amount. Under some statutes the bond is required to be in a sum not less than the contract price,⁴⁶ while under other statutes the amount of the bond must be fixed by the court.⁴⁷

Justification and approval of sureties. The statutes usually require that the bond shall be executed with good and sufficient sureties,⁴⁸ who are to be approved by the court or a designated officer.⁴⁹

Statutory provisions for notice of justification of the sureties must be strictly observed.⁵⁰ While the sureties cannot object to the sufficiency of the bond because of their failure to justify as required by statute,⁵¹ where the sureties whose names were signed to the bond were impersonated by others appearing before the master in chancery, who gave false answers with respect to their property, the bond, although signed and approved by the master, does not effect a dissolution of the lien.⁵²

Approval and filing of bond. It is usually required that the bond shall be approved by the court or by a designated officer⁵³ and filed or recorded in a designated office.⁵⁴ It has been held that the court will not approve of the security offered after scire facias has issued on a mechanic's lien unless the issuing of the scire facias is recited in the bond⁵⁵ and it contains a warrant of attorney for entering judgment for the amount that shall be found due, with interest and costs.⁵⁶ The approval of an irregular bond, limited to certain beneficiaries named therein and based on an express waiver of their rights, is a rejection of such bond as to all other persons for whose benefit it was intended.⁵⁷

Estoppel to deny validity. The sureties on a bond to prevent or discharge liens are estopped to deny its validity where persons entitled to liens have in reliance on the bond refrained from filing lien claims and in consequence lost their right to perfect liens⁵⁸ or where liens which have been filed have been discharged on the faith of the bond.⁵⁹ Likewise the obligor, after the bond has been treated as valid by all the parties and the lien discharged, may not object in an action on the bond that the amount thereof exceeded the jurisdiction of the court which accepted it⁶⁰ or evade liability because of the omission of a seal from the bond⁶¹. The lienor is not estopped to assert any objection to the bond which he can make good by reason of his taking part in the proceeding in which the bond was given.⁶²

§ 237. Effect of Bond or Deposit

Under some statutes the effect of a bond given, approved, and filed is to prevent liens from attaching and to discharge liens which have already been filed.

Where a bond is given, approved, and filed as provided by statute, its effect is determined by statute,⁶³ according to the statutes, the effect is to prevent liens from attaching⁶⁴ and to discharge liens which have been already filed,⁶⁵ and the bond is substituted as security in place of the lien on the real estate,⁶⁶ but it does not otherwise change the relation or rights of the parties⁶⁷. The filing of a bond after a suit to enforce a lien has been commenced does not necessitate the dismissal of the suit,⁶⁸ since it is proper to allow the suit to continue for the purpose of having the amount due on the claim ascertained and declared.⁶⁹

After the bond has been filed it is error, according to some authorities, to decree a lien⁷⁰ or render a decree in personam,⁷¹ but according to other authorities it seems that, notwithstanding the giving of the bond, a personal judgment against the owner may be rendered,⁷² as may be also a decree in form against the property.⁷³

The giving of a bond to discharge property from a mechanic's lien is not an acknowledgment of the validity of the lien,⁷⁴ and the owner may still contest its existence, amount, and validity.⁷⁵ Where a grantee of land subject to a mechanic's lien has given a bond to discharge the lien, he cannot show for the purpose of defeating a recovery on the bond that the lien could not have been satisfied out of the grantor's interest because of prior encumbrances.⁷⁶

Under some statutes, on the filing of the bond, the principal and surety thereon become parties in any action commenced, or to be commenced on the lien claim.⁷⁷

§ 238. Liability on Bond

The liability of a surety on a bond given to prevent or discharge a mechanic's lien depends on whether the facts bring the case within the condition of the bond.

vent or discharge a mechanic's lien depends on whether the facts bring the case within the condition of the bond,⁷⁸ when that condition is fairly and reasonably construed.⁷⁹ If the principal in the bond is not liable to plaintiff, the surety is not liable.⁸⁰ There is no liability on the bond where the lienor fails to establish a valid lien,⁸¹ regardless of whether the condition of the bond is to pay any judgment which may be rendered against the property for the enforcement of the lien⁸² or is to pay any judgment which may be recovered in an action to enforce or foreclose the lien.⁸³ While the sureties are not released from liability because the judgment in the foreclosure action did not provide for the enforcement of the lien against the property,⁸⁴ nevertheless, where a judgment against the principal for a lien against the property,⁸⁵ or a judgment establishing that the lien, when discharged by the undertaking, was valid and enforceable in a fixed amount,⁸⁶ has been rendered, it is conclusive on the sureties, even though they were not parties to the former action in which it was rendered,⁸⁷ and they cannot object that the action should have been in equity⁸⁸ and all persons in interest made parties.⁸⁹

The fact that the principal procured the signature of a surety on the promise that the principal would afterward obtain the signature of another surety, which was not done, will not relieve the surety from obligation on a bond delivered, approved, and filed as the law requires.⁹⁰ Also the allowance by the court of a purely formal amendment of the lien claim does not discharge the surety from liability.⁹¹ As between the sureties on a bond to discharge a mechanic's lien, binding them to pay any judgment in an action to enforce the claim or foreclose the lien, and the sureties on an undertaking given by the owner on appeal from a judgment in an action against him to foreclose the lien, the former are in effect principals and the latter sureties,⁹² and the former cannot therefore insist that the person for whose benefit the bond and undertaking were given shall, before proceeding against them, pursue his remedies against the latter.⁹³

Cancellation It has been held that an undertaking given to discharge a mechanic's lien may be canceled on the ground that the lien has terminated by a lapse of time.⁹⁴

In some jurisdictions the remedy of the mechanic against the surety is by an action at law on the undertaking, but in other jurisdictions a recovery on the bond may be had in an equitable proceeding as well as in an action at law.

Common-law cognizance

Question of liability is purely of common-law cognizance—Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York v. D. N. Morrison Const. Co. of Virginia, 126 So 151, 99 Fla 309, followed in Granat v. Dubbs, 130 So 464, 100 Fla 1145, and Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York v. Coley & Peterson of Virginia, 126 So 157, 99 Fla 327

Bond not enforceable in equity

(1) Equity court cannot enforce penalty of bond, unless there is ground of equitable cognizance to which recovery on bond is incidental—Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York v. D. N. Morrison Const. Co. of Virginia, 126 So 151, 99 Fla 309, folpending the suit to enforce the lien⁹⁶ In other jurisdictions a recovery on the bond may be had in an equitable proceeding⁹⁷ as well as in an action at law⁹⁸ The lienor may first bring an action against the debtor alone to foreclose the lien,⁹⁹ and, on the recovery of a judgment establishing the validity and amount of the lien, may then maintain an action at law against the sureties on the bond¹ It is not a condition precedent to the bringing of an action against the sureties that the lienor shall exhaust his remedy against the owner by recovering a judgment of foreclosure in form against the property,² but he may bring a single action in equity³ in which all persons interested,⁴ including the owner⁵ and the sureties on the bond,⁶ are made parties, to obtain a determination of the rights, liabilities, and equities of all parties interested,⁷ a judgment establishing the validity and amount of the lien,⁸ and a personal judgment against the principal and sureties on the bond,⁹ and the latter course has been commended as the better practice¹⁰ The real party in interest may sue on the bond,¹¹ and leave of court to sue the sureties is not necessary¹²

defenses are also concurrent¹³ The sureties may set up any legal or equitable defense which would have availed the principal¹⁴ and are not precluded from doing so by the failure of the principal to defend¹⁵ Where an owner for a considerable period of time after a contract for improvements had been executed took no steps to repudiate it because of alleged duress, neither he¹⁶ nor his surety on the release bond¹⁷ can defend an action on the bond on the ground of duress Where building contractors, after giving an undertaking to discharge the mechanic's lien of a subcontractor by securing the payment of any judgment against such property in his favor, brought an action against the owner to foreclose a lien filed by themselves and made the subcontractor a party defendant, and the owner appealed from a judgment establishing both liens, and directing sale of the property and payment, and gave an undertaking to stay execution, this appeal and stay constituted no defense to an action by the subcontractor on the undertaking to discharge his lien¹⁸ allegations and prayers for relief appropriate to the form of the action.²⁰ It has been held that lienors, joined as defendants in an action to foreclose a lien, are required to set forth their liens in answer, and serve an answer on the owner in order to enforce their claims against the surety.²¹ Some statutes provide that, when the lien has been discharged by giving a bond, the material facts, if any, in dispute between claimant and the parties signing the bond shall be tried by a jury without further pleadings²² with the same effect as though pleadings had been filed and an action commenced at law,²³ but a failure strictly to follow the statute in this respect may be waived by defendant.²⁴ The rules of evidence obtaining in civil actions generally are applicable in actions of this nature.²⁵

Judgment The decree may be properly rendered against the owner and the surety.²⁶ Where the lien has been discharged by the bond of a surety company, the judgment should be against the company for the amount of the lien.²⁷ However, in an action on the bond there can be no recovery of an amount in excess of that secured by the discharged lien.²⁸ A failure to introduce the lien in evidence does not entitle the sureties to a judgment on the merits,²⁹ but only to a dismissal.³⁰ A lien on the property may not be decreed in favor of the surety after there has been a recovery on the bond.³¹

D. DISCHARGE, EXTINGUISHMENT, RELEASE, OR PAYMENT

§ 240. Discharge in General

After extinguishment of a mechanic's lien it may be canceled of record in proper proceedings had for that purpose.

Where a mechanic's lien is extinguished or satisfied, but still remains of record and an apparent cloud on the title, the owner may compel its discharge of record where, on request, the lienor refuses to act.³² Accordingly it has been held that a court of competent jurisdiction may entertain an action to annul, vacate, cancel, or discharge a mechanic's lien, and may grant relief in a proper case therefor,³³ even in the absence of statutory authority.³⁴ Where, however, due payment or satisfaction is not shown, the owner may not have the lien canceled and discharged of record,³⁵ and, where the owner's duplicity prevents the perfection of liens in full accordance with statutory requirements, the

A building owner could maintain chancery action to test validity of a material and labor lien filed against owner's property by the contractor, and for an accounting, as against contention that owner's only remedy under statute providing for such liens was to file a bond, where owner alleged that effect of contractor's action was to tie up owner in effort to pay off all claims of subcontractors and materialmen, and that contractor did not act in good faith or by honest mistake in claiming too great a sum in his statement of lien, owner was not precluded from maintaining such action on ground that owner had a "complete and adequate remedy at law"—Jenks v Daniel, 7 N.W.2d 286, 304 Mich 239.

Reconventional demand for balance on contract should be dismissed, where plaintiff's damages from defendant's breach of contract exceeded amount claimed by defendant—Rodick v Martin, 127 So 110, 12 La. App 690.

Sufficiency of evidence

(1) In action to cancel lien, defendant who abandoned contract to furnish materials and plumbing work held not to sustain burden of proving there was balance due him, with respect to reconvention claim which he interposed—Rodick v Martin, 127 So 110, 12 La. App 690.

(2) In building owner's chancery action against contractor to invalidate material and labor lien filed, for an accounting and to recover damages for breach of contract, evidence regarding contractor's defective and unworkmanlike construction warranted decree that owner was indebted to contractor in a certain sum which was much less than amount demanded in lien—Jenks v Daniel, 7 N.W.2d 286, 304 Mich 239.

(3) In suit to cancel mechanic's lien, issue of acknowledgment of mechanic's lien is determinable by preponderance of all evidence—Robertson v Vernon, Tex Com App, 12 S.W.2d 991.

In jurisdictions where the modes of discharging the lien are prescribed by statute it can be discharged only in one of the modes provided,³⁷ since the statutes providing particular methods for discharging the lien negative the idea that the legislature intended to vest in the court the power to discharge the lien by other process, or for other causes, than those expressed in the statutes³⁸ From this construction of the statutes it follows that a discharge unauthorized by the express provisions of the statutes will be vacated and the lien reinstated,³⁹ but an order vacating another order canceling and discharging a mechanic's lien will itself be vacated at the instance of a person who purchased the property immediately after the order of cancellation and who did not receive any notice of the application of the order to vacate⁴⁰ A mechanic's lien cannot be discharged where a motion to cancel the notice of the pendency of an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien should not be granted, and plaintiff's rights under the notice and under the lien are inseparable.⁴¹

Penalty Under statutes providing that a penalty may be recovered of a lienor in a proper case where, on demand, he fails or refuses to cause the lien to be satisfied or discharged of record, the penalty will be imposed only in a case within the statute⁴² and on the filing of a proper and sufficient complaint in an action to recover the penalty⁴³ A statute subjecting a mortgagee to a penalty for refusing after demand to satisfy of record a mortgage which has been paid is not so extensive as to apply against mechanics' lienholders who have placed a claim on record,⁴⁴ and in any event it would not cover a case where the contention is that a false claim was placed on record and not that a valid lien was placed on record and should have been canceled on demand because subsequently paid⁴⁵

§ 241. Extinguishment or Loss in General

While a mechanic's lien may be lost or abandoned, the courts will not readily hold that a lien once acquired has been extinguished in the absence of circumstances tending to show a waiver or making it inequitable that the lien should remain in force.

Like other lien rights, discussed in Liens § 17, the statutory right to a mechanic's lien may be lost,⁴⁶ abandoned,⁴⁷ or discharged of record, as discussed supra § 240 However, the courts will not readily hold that a mechanic's lien, once duly acquired, has been lost or extinguished in the absence of circumstances tending to show a waiver or making it inequitable that the lien should remain in force.⁴⁸ In jurisdictions where a mechanic's lien is secured by constitutional provision, grave reasons must be shown in every case to justify a holding that such a lien is lost or destroyed.⁴⁹

Lien claimants who furnished labor and material for construction of building erected by lessee had equities in their favor, with respect to landowner's contention that forfeiture of lease freed property from liens—English v. Olympic Auditorium, 20 P.2d 946, 217 Cal. 631, 87 A.L.R. 1281

of the lien,⁵⁰ including an unaccepted offer, made in an attempted compromise or settlement, of an amount different from that recoverable,⁵¹ the conversion of an open account, constituting the claim on which the lien is founded, into an account stated,⁵² the mere restatement of the account by deducting certain items,⁵³ the fact that a suit to enforce the lien is prematurely brought,⁵⁴ a nonsuit in a scire facias on the lien,⁵⁵ payment of a mortgage encumbrance by the property owner,⁵⁶ delay in enforcing a judgment of foreclosure,⁵⁷ and proceedings to foreclose a mortgage without notice to the lienor.⁵⁸

Under some circumstances the release of a surety on a bond conditioned to deliver construction notes does not destroy the lien⁵⁹ or lessen the amount thereof.⁶⁰ Also the lien of a subcontractor is not lost by his failure to consolidate his claim for labor with others in an action before a justice of the peace against the original contractor, where such other claims are wholly disconnected with his lien and have no relation to the transaction out of which it arose.⁶¹ The lien, however, may be lost by including nonlienable claims in the judgment.⁶² It has been broadly held that, under a constitutional provision granting mechanics a lien on articles made or

Failure to furnish statement on demand Under the express provisions of some statutes a claimant may forfeit his lien by failing to comply with the demand of the owner for a written statement of the amount of work and materials furnished.⁶⁴ Such a statute is enforceable even though the owner possesses knowledge of the facts to be included in the statement⁶⁵ and is not prejudiced by failure of claimant to comply with the demand,⁶⁶ but it does not apply where the demand is not made until after suit is brought to enforce the lien.⁶⁷

§ 242. Destruction or Removal of Building or Improvement

A mechanic's lien on land has been held to survive destruction or removal of the buildings and improvements, but there is also authority to the contrary.

It has been judicially acknowledged that there is a conflict of authority on the question whether a mechanic's lien on land is defeated by the destruction of the building or improvement for which the lien is claimed.⁶⁸ This conflict is said to arise from a difference in the text of the mechanics' lien laws⁶⁹ rather than from any real difference in principle.⁷⁰ In some jurisdictions the destruction of the building or improvement out of which the lien is claimed to arise defeats the lien on the land,⁷¹ regardless of whether the claim of lien is filed before⁷² or after⁷³ the building is destroyed, and regardless of whether the building is completed⁷⁴ or uncompleted⁷⁵ at the time of its destruction. In such a jurisdiction, however, it has been held that the lien survives the destruction of the building where such destruction arises from fault of the owner.⁷⁶

In other jurisdictions, however, it is the rule that a mechanic's lien which has attached to a building or improvement and the land on which it is situated is not defeated or extinguished as to the land by the destruction of the building or improvement by fire or other casualty⁷⁷ even though the destruction takes place before the lien notice, claim, or statement is filed.⁷⁸ This rule has been held applicable even though the building or improvement is destroyed before the work thereon is completed,⁷⁹ at least where by the terms of the contract the risk of destruction by fire was to be on the owner,⁸⁰ but not, it has been held, where under the terms of the contract nothing is due from the owner to the contractor until completion of the building.⁸¹

or where the contract fails to provide that loss from accidental causes is to be borne by the owner.⁸² So also it is held in some jurisdictions,⁸³ but not in others,⁸⁴ that the removal of the building or improvement after the lien has attached does not defeat the lien on the land.

A partial destruction of a structure or improvement does not defeat the lien entirely,⁸⁵ it may attach to the remains of the building or the materials or machinery saved⁸⁶ or to the proceeds of a sale thereof.⁸⁷

terial and labor liens⁸⁹ The rule applies to all the property covered by the lien,⁹⁰ but it does not extend to property not covered by the lien⁹¹ Also the rule may apply so as to allow the establishment of a lien for work done or materials furnished after a sale of the premises, where such work was done or materials were furnished pursuant to the original contract;⁹² but not otherwise, at least where the materials were furnished without the knowledge of the purchaser⁹³ A claim for work done under a separate contract with the purchaser of premises has been held to attach as a lien superior to the title of the purchaser where the claim is registered within the time required by law⁹⁴

b. Before or after Perfection of Lien

The rule that a mechanic's lien survives a subsequent conveyance does not apply where the claimant fails to perfect his lien, but has been held to apply where the lien is perfected after the conveyance.

The general rule that, after a mechanic's lien has attached, it is not defeated by a subsequent conveyance of the property does not apply where claimant fails to perfect his lien in accordance with statutory requirements⁹⁵ such as where he fails to file his claim within the statutory period⁹⁶ and in the proper county,⁹⁷ or where he fails to pursue the alternative course of bringing suit in the proper court and within the proper time⁹⁸ However, the general rule does apply where the conveyance is made after a valid and sufficient lien claim or notice is filed,⁹⁹ and it has been held that a person acquiring property subject to a mechanic's lien continues to hold it subject to the lien claimant's right to foreclose the lien provided the lien is duly perfected and preserved¹ The rule that a mechanic's lien survives transfer of title has been held applicable even though the conveyance is made before the filing of the lien notice or claim required by statute to perfect the lien,² where the time for the perfection of the lien has not yet expired,³ but, as discussed infra subdivision d of this section, under some statutes the lien does not attach as against a bona fide purchaser without actual notice of the lien who purchases before the filing of the lien notice

c. Before or after Commencement of Action to Enforce Lien

The rule that a mechanic's lien survives a subsequent conveyance may apply whether the deed was executed and recorded before or after commencement of a suit to enforce the lien.

The general rule that, where the lien has attached, the rights of the lienor are not affected by a subsequent sale or conveyance of the premises may apply where the deed was executed and recorded before the commencement of an action to enforce the lien,⁴ but it does not apply where, under the constitutional or statutory provisions, the lien has not attached prior to the institution of the suit⁵ A conveyance after proceedings to enforce the lien have been commenced⁶ and a certificate thereof has been filed as provided by statute⁷ is subject to the lien, and a purchaser of property, who has actual notice of a decree foreclosing a mechanic's lien thereon, takes the property subject to the lien⁸ although no notice of lis pendens or transcript of the judgment is filed with the county auditor.⁹ However, where a personal judgment only is rendered in a suit wherein foreclosure of a mechanic's lien is prayed, the title of one purchasing the property during pendency of the suit is relieved from the lien claimed.¹⁰

d. Notice or Absence Thereof

A purchaser with notice of a mechanic's lien takes subject thereto, but it has been held that a purchaser without actual notice of the lien claim and prior to the filing of notice of lien takes free of the lien.

The general rule that a sale or conveyance of the property after a mechanic's lien has attached thereto does not defeat the lien applies where the purchaser has notice of the lien,¹¹ whether actual,¹² or constructive.¹³ So a purchaser acquiring title after commencement of work but before perfection of the lien takes subject thereto if buying with notice of the facts¹⁴ and of the claim of lien.¹⁵ It has been generally held, however, that a purchaser for value without notice takes free and clear of a mechanic's lien,¹⁶ as for labor¹⁷ or materials,¹⁸ and that, with respect to a bona fide purchaser, the lienholder can have no greater rights than the owner through whom he claims.¹⁹

Under some statutes the lien does not attach as against a bona fide purchaser without actual notice of the lien who purchases before the filing of the lien notice,²⁰ although after the work is commenced,²¹ provided the conveyance is properly recorded prior to the filing or registration of the lien.²² According to other authorities a purchaser, although he acquires the property before filing of the lien notice and without actual notice of the lien claim, may nevertheless take the property subject to the lien²³ on the theory that the mere fact that buildings or improvements are being erected on the property constitutes constructive notice of the mechanics' liens to persons dealing with the property.²⁴ It has also been held that a purchaser who

buys in good faith for value and without notice takes the land discharged of the mechanic's lien, but that the lien is preserved in full force and unimpaired as against the building.²⁵ A person who, with notice of the nature and amount of a contractor's mechanic's lien, takes a conveyance of the property subject to, it cannot be affected by a subsequent alteration of the contractor's contract.²⁶

Notice to lienor. It has been held that a purchaser's possession of property may charge the lienor with notice of the purchaser's rights notwithstanding failure to record the contract of purchase,²⁷ and that materialmen furnishing supplies to the purchaser are bound by the terms of a previously executed deed between the purchaser and the vendor against whom materialmen seek to foreclose their liens.²⁸ It has also been held, however, that a lienor doing work under a contract with the owner is not bound to take notice of a subsequent conveyance of the property.²⁹

§ 244. — Judicial Proceedings or Sale

On a judicial or execution sale of property a mechanic's lien thereon may attach to the proceeds of sale.

On a judicial³⁰ or execution³¹ sale of property subject to a mechanic's lien, the lien may be discharged as to the real property and transferred to the proceeds of the sale. The lien is discharged from the property where the judicial sale is under a lien or encumbrance prior to the mechanic's lien,³² and in some states the same result follows even though the mechanic's lien is prior to the lien or claim under which the sale is made.³³ Where there are several mechanics' liens arising out of the same improvement and thus of equal rank, a sale under one of the liens passes the land free from all the others.³⁴

Lien, or priority thereof, limited to land or building alone. The foreclosure of a mechanic's lien, prior in time but limited to the building, will not divest a subsequent mechanic's lien on the land, the two liens attaching on different properties.³⁵ Also, under some statutes where land is sold under a mortgage or deed of trust, a mechanic's lien which attached subsequently to the origin of the encumbrance is lost as to the land,³⁶ but is not extinguished as to the buildings, erections, or improvements for which the labor is performed or the materials are furnished.³⁷ There is also authority to the effect that the holder of a privilege on a building loses it where he permits a sale to be made at the instance of another person without securing an appraisal of the building separate from the lot.³⁸

Contract during pendency of foreclosure proceedings. Where a person improves property under a contract made with the owner during the pendency of an action to foreclose a prior mortgage, it has been held that a decree of sale in such foreclosure proceedings will cut off all the rights of the mechanic or materialman to a lien.³⁹ the lien, and a conveyance of the property to the lienor may merge the lien in the legal title, although it will not necessarily have such effect.

A conveyance of the property to the lienor does not necessarily merge the lien in the legal title,⁴⁰ and, although it has been held that the lien is satisfied and discharged by the conveyance where a part of the consideration therefor is the release of the indebtedness and the lien,⁴¹ it has also been held that the mere recitation in the deed from the owner to the lienholder that the deed was accepted in cancellation of the debt secured by the lien is not conclusive as to the lienholder's intention to merge the two estates.⁴² A mechanic's lien sold and assigned to the owner of the legal title of the property does not merge in the legal title where there was an evident intention to keep the lien alive and a merger would be inequitable and unjust.⁴³ Ordinarily, where mechanics' liens are entered against an equitable estate, they survive or perish with it,⁴⁴ but where one with an equitable title to realty, such as that of a purchaser, authorizes construction work to which a mechanic's lien attaches, the fact that his equitable title is subsequently merged in the legal title through transfer from the legal owner does not destroy the mechanic's lien on the property.⁴⁵

Where the claimant of a mechanic's lien conveys the premises to which the lien attached to the party against whom the lien is asserted, the lien has been held to be merged in the deed of conveyance.⁴⁶

b. Leasehold

A mechanic's lien attaching to a leasehold interest or estate survives a surrender or purchase of such interest by the lessor, but it has been held that the lien will be defeated by expiration or forfeiture of the lease.

The acquisition by the lessor of the leasehold estate, by surrender or purchase, prior to the expiration of the lease, cannot defeat mechanics' liens which have attached to the leasehold estate before the surrender or purchase,⁴⁷ and it has been held that in such case the entire estate becomes liable for payment of the liens.⁴⁸ On the other hand, it has been held that a lien attaching only to the leasehold interest expires with the expiration of the lease.⁴⁹ So also it has been held that the lien cannot be enforced after the lease has been forfeited,⁵⁰ as for nonpayment of rent, pursuant to a provision therein,⁵¹ and the fact that after the forfeiture the owner of the fee purchases the improvements placed by the lessee on the property does not alter the rule,⁵² but the rule is subject to variation under the

c. Vendee's Interest

A mechanic's lien ordinarily survives a voluntary transfer of the vendee's interest to which it is attached, but not a forfeiture thereof.

It has generally been held that, where a purchaser of land under a contract of sale, to whose interest a mechanic's lien has attached, loses his interest in the land by failure to comply with and complete the contract, no lien can be enforced against the land,⁵⁵ although there is some authority to the contrary.⁵⁶ However, in some,⁵⁷ although not all,⁵⁸ jurisdictions a lien may be enforced against the building or other improvement, as under statutes expressly providing that forfeiture of any title or claim of the contracting party shall not defeat a mechanic's lien on the buildings or structures concerned.⁵⁹

Where the vendor repurchases or takes a surrender of the vendee's interest, the lien remains⁶⁰ unless, because of the purchaser having forfeited his rights, his assignment amounts to nothing more than a surrender of possession, without the formality of an eviction.⁶¹ The rule is especially applicable where the vendor knew at the time that the improvements had been made,⁶² or where the intention of the parties to preserve the lien is clear and manifest,⁶³ as where, in consideration of the surrender or reconveyance, the vendor promised or agreed to pay the indebtedness secured by the lien.⁶⁴ In some cases the courts have enforced the lien against the whole estate where the vendor, in consideration of the surrender or reconveyance, agreed or undertook to pay the indebtedness secured by the lien⁶⁵ and there was no equitable consideration requiring the vendee's interest to be treated as still outstanding.⁶⁶

§ 246. Release

- a In general
- b Construction, operation, and effect

a. In General

A mechanic's lien is subject to release, but, in order to be effective, such release should be supported by sufficient consideration and comply with statutory requirements.

A mechanic's lien may be waived or released by the express agreement of the lienor entered into subsequent to the original contract,⁶⁷ as during the progress of the work.⁶⁸ In so far as statutes prescribe the method by which a mechanic's lien may be released, a strict compliance with the statutory requirements is essential.⁶⁹ Ordinarily, a release of a mechanic's lien, in order to be effective, must be founded on a consideration,⁷⁰ and if the consid-

Action to compel release
In action to compel defendant to release a mechanic's lien filed against plaintiff's property for material furnished and to recover damages for failure to release on notice, on ground that defendant had executed waiver of the lien, directing an accounting between the parties, and awarding personal judgment against plaintiff owners for the difference between value of material furnished and damages for failure to release lien was not error, since plaintiffs were personally liable for material furnished even though filing of the lien was waived—Gibson v Koutsky-Brennan-Vana Co., 9 N.W. 2d 298, 143 Neb 326.

eration fails the release is void⁷¹ and the lien may be enforced⁷² even though the release is under seal⁷³. Also, it has been held that, in order for a release of liens to be effective, it must be delivered to or for the use of the owner,⁷⁴ but a release may be effective not only as to the parties thereto, or the owner, but also as to the person for whose benefit it was intended⁷⁵. Where a release names no person to whom it is made and expresses no consideration, extrinsic evidence is admissible to show the consideration⁷⁶ and to determine in whose favor it was intended to be made⁷⁷. A mechanic's lienholder may be estopped to show that he is not bound by a release⁷⁸.

Fraud Whether the owner will be allowed in equity to take advantage of a release fraudulently procured by the contractor from a claimant depends on the agency of the contractor, and the owner will not be allowed to take any benefit or advantage of the release where the contractor was the agent of the owner,⁷⁹ and will be entitled to protection only to the extent that he has acted on the faith of the release where the contractor was the agent of claimant⁸⁰.

Cancellation of release. A release will not be canceled for failure to comply with conditions not communicated to the recipient of the release⁸¹ or for duress used in obtaining possession of the release after its return to the releasor through fraud⁸².

Penalty for failure to release lien Statutes providing that a materialman shall forfeit an amount not exceeding one half the amount claimed by his lien for failure to release the lien on notice in a proper case are remedial in nature⁸³ and permit recovery of actual damages in a civil action but limit the amount thereof.⁸⁴ The petition in such an action need not use the word "damages" but may follow the language of the statute.⁸⁵

A release will be construed and given effect in accordance with its terms, purpose, and the subject matter to which it can apply.

A release will be construed and given effect according to its terms,⁸⁶ purpose,⁸⁷ and the subject matter to which it can apply.⁸⁸ Some releases are comprehensive and unqualified,⁸⁹ while others are limited in their application and operation⁹⁰. Ord-

narily a valid release of a mechanic's lien will preclude its subsequent enforcement,⁹¹ although it may, while discharging the land and buildings, still leave a contractor liable to pay for labor and materials furnished by a subcontractor.⁹² A release of the lien as to part of the property covered thereby does not destroy the lien on the rest of the property,⁹³ but ordinarily, where one building is released, an item for work or materials therein cannot be included in a lien on the remaining buildings.⁹⁴

A lien once extinguished by virtue of a release cannot be revived or restored by any act of claimant,⁹⁵ but a conditional release is not effective unless the terms on which it is conditioned are complied with by the person asserting a right under it,⁹⁶ and, even though subcontractors may have released their lien, if the contractor fails to complete his contract and they are subsequently employed by the owner to complete certain work they can enforce a lien for what is done under the latter employment.⁹⁷ The release of a lessee under whom the work was done is an implied agreement to release the owner.⁹⁸

Effect of contractor's release on other claimants Materialmen and subcontractors may be entitled to liens although the contractor has released his own right to a lien,⁹⁹ but not where he has executed a release of all claims for mechanics' liens.¹

§ 247. Payment in General

Payment of the debt extinguishes a mechanic's lien.

A payment of the debt necessarily extinguishes the lien,² and a partial payment reduces the lien pro tanto³ although it does not destroy the lien for the unpaid balance⁴ unless it is so agreed,⁵ or unless by agreement the owner was liable only for the portion paid, the balance being assumed by a third person.⁶ A purchaser of property has the right to pay a debt thereon and demand cancellation of a mechanic's lien securing such debt,⁷ and under some statutes a lessor has the right to discharge a lien on buildings and improvements made by the lessee and prevent the sale or removal of the building or improvements by paying the purchaser its value,⁸ but such rights do not confer on the lessee the right to redeem the building for his lessor in the absence of express or implied power of attorney or agency.⁹

The rules governing payments generally are applicable in determining what constitutes a payment which will extinguish a mechanic's lien or reduce the amount thereof.¹⁰

§ 248. — Application of Payments in General

Payments received by a mechanic's lienor should be applied as directed by the debtor, or, in the absence of such direction, they may be applied as the creditor prefers, or, if neither makes an application, the courts will apply such payments as justice may require.

Where the lien claimant at the time of receiving a payment from the owner or the contractor has other claims against the person by whom such payment is made, the effect of the payment on the lien depends on whether the payment was applied to the lienable claim,¹¹ and the application of such payments is governed by the general rules on the subject.¹² If the debtor applies the payment his application governs,¹³ as does the direction of the owner or his representative where making a payment direct to the lien claimant,¹⁴ but in the absence of such a direction the creditor may apply the payment on whichever debt he chooses,¹⁵ and if he applies it to a debt other than the one for which the lien is claimed, as he is ordinarily entitled to do,¹⁶

Materialman's application of contractor's payment to unsecured rather than secured contract, if constituting afterthought induced by contractor's bankruptcy, should not be permitted—Bryce Plumbing & Heating Co v American Surety Co, 160 SE 593, 162 SC 239.

the payment does not discharge or reduce the lien.¹⁷ Where the creditor once makes an application, however, he is usually bound thereby and cannot change it without consent of all interested parties,¹⁸ and accordingly, where the creditor applies the payment to the lien debt and the lien is thus extinguished, the application cannot be changed without the consent of the debtor so as to revive the lien.¹⁹

The foregoing rules as to the application of payments by the creditor in the absence of directions by the debtor are applicable regardless of whether the creditor is a contractor receiving payments from the owner,²⁰ or a subcontractor, materialman, or laborer receiving payments from the contractor,²¹ or directly from the owner.²² Also the general rule that, in the absence of a direction by the debtor to the contrary, payments on a general account may be applied by the creditor to the oldest item thereof is in most cases applicable to an account for which a mechanic's lien may be established.²³ It has been held, however, that money paid by the owner to materialmen cannot be applied by them to the payment of an amount owed them by the contractor on transactions not connected with the contract for the erection of the building,²⁴ and that, where a subcontractor employed on defendant's building has had an account with the contractor for work and material on contracts for other buildings, he has no right to credit the contractor on their old account for material furnished by the contractor to the subcontractor and which actually went into defendant's building.²⁵ Under express statutory provisions it has been held that a materialman furnishing materials for several houses being constructed by the same person may apportion a partial payment among the different houses in proportion to the amount of material furnished to each.²⁶

Where no application is made by either the debtor or creditor, the law will apply the payment as justice and equity may require,²⁷ and under the rules governing the application of payments generally the court ordinarily will apply a payment to unsecured debts or nonlienable items, leaving the lienable claim and the lien therefor unaffected,²⁸ or, in the case of a continuous account, it will apply the payment to the first or oldest unpaid debit items thereof.²⁹ However, in cases where the circumstances require it, the courts will not hesitate to de-

Class sharing equitably

The lien law intended to protect all claims of subcontractors, architects, engineers, surveyors, laborers, and materialmen arising out of an improvement, and all persons within the protection of the statute form a class which should equitably share in the funds on which the statute imposes a trust.—In re Marstan Plumbing Co, 28 NYS 2d 190, 176 Misc 956

Public improvements

(1) Funds received by contractor from county for bridge construction and paid to bank in repayment of bank's loans to contractor were not "funds received by contractor from owner for improvement of real property" within statute making such funds trust funds for benefit of laborers and materialmen, since statute did not contemplate funds received for public improvements.—Vulcan Rail & Construction Co v Westchester County, 293 NYS 945, 250 App Div 212

(2) Bank to which money received by contractor from county for bridge construction was paid in payment of

loans to contractor, without knowledge of claims of laborers and materialmen against contractor, could not be held liable to laborers and materialmen on ground that statute imposed trust on such money in favor of such laborers and materialmen, since statute, if construed to impose such trust, imposed the trust only on money in hands of contractor.—Vulcan Rail & Construction Co v Westchester County, 293 NYS 945, 250 App Div 212

Claims for labor and materials

(1) The statutes declaring moneys received for erection of a building to be trust funds, and making it unlawful to use or pay out such moneys until all claims due for labor and materials are paid, has for its object both the protection of the owner whose property, by reason of the implied agency of the contractor, may be liable for subcontracts, labor, or materials furnished for the building, and to give additional protection to the subcontractors, laborers, or materialmen engaged on the building.—State v Tabasso Homes, Del Gen Sess, 28 A 2d 248

(2) The word "contractor" as used in such statutes means one who enters into a contract, directly or indirectly, with the owner of realty for the construction, alteration, or repair of a building thereon.—State v Tabasso Homes, supra.

(3) A corporation which agreed with a purchaser to erect a house on realty owned by the corporation and to sell the realty and the house to the purchaser for a unit price without any specific amount representing the cost of the realty and of the house, was the owner and not a contractor within meaning of statute.—State v. Tabasso Homes, supra.

duty of contractors³⁹ and subcontractors⁴⁰ to hold and disburse the funds received in accordance with the requirements of the statute. Some decisions hold the statute applicable to protect a claimant even though he has not filed a lien,⁴¹ but other decisions hold that the statute applies only to such claimants as have filed liens.⁴² Although money received for the improvement of realty is under such provisions impressed with a trust, it still remains the property of the one doing the work,⁴³ and there is no basis in the statutes for an action of conversion.⁴⁴ Also such statutory provisions do not abrogate the requirement that creditors' claims be reduced to judgment before resort is had to equity to compel a debtor to account,⁴⁵ and they have been held inapplicable to an assignee merely accepting payment of a debt.⁴⁶ It has also been held that such statutes refer only to established claims which have been asserted and concerning which the holder of funds has definite knowledge of their existence.⁴⁷

A general contractor could not contend that there was no fund to which a subcontractor's lien might attach because of a provision in the contract between the general contractor and subcontractor's employer, where the general contractor continuously paid itself and others out of money due the employer and accepted its work after the receipt of subcontractor's order and the filing of the subcontractor's lien—Williamson & Adams v McMahon-McEntegart, Inc., 10 NYS 2d 37, 256 App Div 313

§ 249. — Payments by Contractor with Money Received from Owner or Other Interested Person

Ordinarily a materialman or other lien claimant receiving payment from a contractor made with money received from the owner or other person interested in the construction may apply the payment as he sees fit unless chargeable with knowledge of the source, in which case he must apply it so as to protect the rights of the person from whom the contractor obtained the funds.

Frequently a person furnishing materials to a contractor engaged in the erection of several buildings accepts from the contractor a payment of money received by the contractor from the owner of one of the buildings or other person interested in the construction, and the question arises whether an application of the payment otherwise than on the claim for materials furnished for the building of the owner for whom the money was paid will be upheld.⁴⁸ The question is generally determined according to claimant's knowledge or notice, or absence thereof, of the source of the money paid, the application being upheld where claimant was without knowledge or notice of the source of the funds,⁴⁹ but not where he had knowledge or notice

under lien law to compel corporation to account for moneys alleged to have been received for work on an improvement of realty—Continental Casualty Co v Ben-Mil, Inc., supra of the source⁵⁰ Moreover, it has been held that knowledge of the source imposes a duty on the materialman to apply the funds to the particular job even though he receives no such direction from the contractor⁵¹ Where, however, the parties by express or implied agreement consent to a different application of the funds the court will apply the payment in accordance with such intention⁵²

Some courts taking the view that claimant's knowledge or absence of knowledge of the source of the funds is controlling have taken the position that claimant is not bound to ascertain from what particular contract the contractor realized the money with which he made the payment⁵³ Other courts, however, hold that the application will not be upheld even where claimant was without knowledge of the source of the money paid,⁵⁴ since it is incumbent on him to ascertain the account to which the payment is to be applied⁵⁵ In some cases the courts, in refusing to disturb an application by claimant of a payment, give weight to the fact that the owner in paying the money to the contractor gave no directions as to its application,⁵⁶ or that he, with at least implied knowledge of claimant's lien, did not exact a waiver thereof,⁵⁷ and hold that, in the absence of a contrary direction by the contractor, the materialman may apply the payment as he wishes despite knowledge that the owner was the source of the money the contractor paid⁵⁸ It has also been held that, in the absence of fraud and collusion, a materialman receiving from a contractor money paid over by the owner may apply such payment to any debts owed him by the contractor⁵⁹

On the other hand it has been held that, where the owner makes a payment on the assurance of the contractor that it is to be applied to the payment of a claim for materials, it should be so applied, and not applied to the payment of a loan owing by the contractor to the materialman⁶⁰ Also an application by a materialman to other debts of the contractor of money received by cashing a check of the contractor will not be upheld where it is not only contrary to directions given by the owner who furnished the money with which the check was paid, but the materialman cashed the check in violation of an agreement not to do so ⁶¹

Some courts, however, have refused to disturb an application of a payment contrary to the directions of the owner to the contractor in the absence of knowledge on the part of claimant of such directions ⁶² The court will not disturb an application of payments where it does not appear from the pleadings ⁶³ or the testimony ⁶⁴ that the money with which the payment was made came from the owner in question Under statutes broadly providing that the risk of payments made to the original contractor shall be on the owner until expiration of a prescribed period and that no owner shall be liable to an action by the contractor until after expiration of such period, where the owner pays the contractor within such period and the contractor pays a materialman without direction as to application and the materialman lacks notice of the source of the funds, the materialman may apply them as he sees fit ⁶⁵

A materialman receiving payment from a subcontractor with knowledge that the funds were derived from a certain contractor has been held obligated to apply the payment to debts connected with the contractor; but it has also been held that he may apply it to a prior debt of the subcontractor and still preserve his lien where no liens have yet been filed against the property.

It has been held that a materialman receiving a payment from a subcontractor with knowledge that the funds came from a certain contractor is obligated to apply the payment on work of the principal contractor rather than on accounts of the subcontractor not connected therewith ⁶⁶ It has also been held, however, that a materialman accepting from a subcontractor a payment of money which the subcontractor has received from the contractor on the contract may apply it to a prior debt of the subcontractor, and still maintain his lien, where no liens have yet been filed against the property and the jurisdiction is one in which a lien does not attach until the notice of the lien is filed ⁶⁷

Where a mechanic's lien is regarded as independent of the state of accounts between owner and contractor, payment to the contractor cannot defeat the lien; but, where the mechanic's lien is deemed to arise from subrogation to the contractor's rights, payment to him may defeat the lien

Under statutes conforming to the Pennsylvania system of direct liens, the right of a subcontractor, materialman, or workman to a lien is not dependent on the state of accounts between the owner and contractor, as discussed supra § 105, and hence the lien is not defeated or affected by any payment to the contractor ⁶⁸ However, under the New York system of liens by subrogation, the right of such persons to a lien is dependent on there being something due or to become due the contractor, as discussed supra § 106, and exists only to the extent of such amount, as considered supra § 174, and pay-

Theory and purpose of law

(1) Theory of mechanics' lien law is that, if owner negligently pays money out to contractor without taking precautions to see that it is applied to payment of materials which go into building, owner must stand loss rather than materialman who has no opportunity to protect himself when he has delivered the materials—Bounds v Nuttle, 80 A 2d 263, 181 Md 400

(2) Purpose of mechanic's lien statute is to give materialmen, whose materials have enhanced value of an owner's property, security by giving materialmen preference over owner in situations where a contractor has received payment from owner but failed to pay materialmen, since owner is in a position to protect himself in making original arrangements—Better Roofing Materials Co v Sztukouski, Mo App, 183 SW 2d 400

In Louisiana

(1) It has been said that right of materialman as furnisher of material sued for would not be unfavorably affected by fact that building owner paid contractor all that was due him for services rendered and material furnished in order to comply with agreements between owner and contractor—Derbes v Marshall, La. App, 183 So 74

(2) Earlier authorities are to the contrary—State v Recorder of Mortgages, 35 La Ann 61—Rousset v Kirwin, 8 La Ann 300—Prola v Mazzei, 2 La A., Orleans, 174

ments properly made to the contractor, in good faith and in accordance with the provisions of the contract, before the owner is given statutory notice of their claims, or has acquired actual notice or knowledge thereof, will deprive them of the right to a lien, entirely or pro tanto according as the payments are in full or in part only leaving something still due.⁶⁹

The rule that payment to the contractor may defeat the lien of others may apply even though the owner has permitted the subcontractor to proceed with the work⁷⁰ or although he stated to claimant that he would defer making the payment to a specified date, and then made the payment prior to the date mentioned.⁷¹ However, where the owner promised to make no further payments without notice to the subcontractor, payments subsequently made without regard to such obligation are not effective against the subcontractor,⁷² and under some circumstances, as between a materialman or subcontractor and the owner, claimant may be estopped to claim that a payment by the owner to the contractor was not properly made,⁷³ or the owner may be estopped to claim that the contractor has been paid.⁷⁴

In order that the lien of a subcontractor, laborer, or materialman may be defeated or reduced by a payment by the owner to the contractor, it is essential that there shall have been a payment,⁷⁵ but unless it is provided otherwise by statute or contract the owner may make payment to the principal contractor in any method and at any time that he chooses.⁷⁶ A statute providing that as to all

liens except that of the contractor the whole contract price shall not be diminished by any prior or subsequent indebtedness, offset, or counterclaim in favor of the owner against the contractor refers and applies only to matters dehors the contract.⁷⁷ An owner may not withhold payment from the principal contractor on the ground that materialmen have not been paid, where the latter have not filed liens and the time for such filing has expired,⁷⁸ but the contractor may not recover against the owner before the expiration of the period allowed subcontractors to perfect their liens, without proof of payment to, or waiver by, the subcontractors.⁷⁹

b. Time of Payment

- (1) In general
- (2) Before due under contract
- (3) Before expiration of period for giving notice or filing claim
- (4) After notice or knowledge of claim

(1) In General

In the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, or notice of lien claims by others, the owner may safely pay the principal contractor whenever the money falls due.

Ordinarily and in the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, the contract price of a building is not deemed a trust fund for the benefit of subcontractors and other such lienors until due notice has been given,⁸⁰ and, where the owner has settled in full with the principal contractor prior to notice of any claim of a laborer or materialman, such persons do not acquire liens on the property as against the owner,⁸¹ provided the payee is in fact an independent contractor and not merely the owner's agent.⁸² Payments made when due are not in bad faith and do not entitle a materialman to a lien,⁸³ and the fact that an owner knew that the principal contractor was indebted to the materialman at the time that the owner paid the contractor will not charge the owner with bad faith or make the materialman's lien valid as to the amount of the payment which was due the contractor when made, where the materialman had given no notice to the owner as to nonpayment for materials furnished.⁸⁴ In making such payments to the principal contractor the owner has the right to rely on his statements as to the amount he owes materialmen.⁸⁵

Rule inapplicable to creditor of owner

After beginning work or furnishing materials
Under the terms of some statutes the lien of a claimant, other than the original contractor, is not defeated or impaired by a payment made by the owner to the contractor after claimant has commenced to perform labor or to furnish materials.⁸⁶

(2) Before Due under Contract

In some jurisdictions, but not in others, payments to the contractor before they are due according to the terms of the contract are not valid as against lien claimants who give the owner the statutory notice of their claims before the time when such payments fall due.

In a number of jurisdictions payments to the contractor before they are due according to the terms of the contract are not valid as against lien claimants who give the owner the statutory notice of their claims before the time when such payments fall due,⁸⁷ although they may be valid as against claimants who have not served notices before the payments were due⁸⁸ or who have unconditionally authorized the owner to make the payment in question.⁸⁹ However, under the statutes of other jurisdictions and the construction placed thereon, payments by the owner to the contractor before they fall due according to the terms of the contract are good against subcontractors and others, when they are made in good faith,⁹⁰ or, in other words, advance payments will be upheld⁹¹ unless they are made in bad faith,⁹² collusively,⁹³ or for the purpose of avoiding the provisions of the statute⁹⁴ or of defeating the liens of subcontractors or other per-quires no lien on the owner's property by notice to him after the owner has paid the contractors in full does not apply to a case where plaintiff is not a materialman furnishing things to the contractor, but is a creditor of the owner by virtue of a contract made with the owner's agent—North Carolina Lumber Co v Spear Motor Co, 135 SE 115, 192 NC 377.

Intent to defraud

Payment of note

Owner's payment to contractor of note given in good faith as advance would not be fraudulent payment of fund to which subcontractor's lien theretofore filed attached—George E Sealy Co v Ards Bldg Corporation, 214 NYS 768, 216 App Div 318, affirmed 155 NE 899, 244 NY 665.

In some jurisdictions wherein the rule prevails that advance payments made in good faith are good as against lien claimants, advance payments may be upheld, even though made with knowledge on the part of the owner of the unpaid claim of a subcontractor or materialman⁹⁶ and without notice by the owner to subsequent lienors of such payments,⁹⁷ but the statutes of other jurisdictions provide that no payment made in advance of the time stipulated in the original contract shall be considered as made in good faith unless written notice of intention to make such payment shall be given to each person known to have furnished materials or rendered services a prescribed number of days before such payment is made,⁹⁸ although, even under such statutes, failure to give the prescribed notice to certain persons is not evidence of bad faith where such persons have already been paid in full⁹⁹ or their names and relation to the work are not known to the owner.¹

Particular payments may not be premature under the terms of the contract and the circumstances of the case.² Unless, under the provisions of the contract, the certificate of the architect is the only mode provided for determining when a payment shall become due,³ the fact that a payment is made before the certificate is given does not necessarily show that it is premature,⁴ nor does the fact that the certificate is given conclusively show that the payment is not premature;⁵ a provision in the contract for a certificate of the architect is for the protection of the owner alone,⁶ and his failure to follow the contract provision is merely a circumstance to be taken into consideration, along with other facts and circumstances of the case, in determining the question of his good faith.⁷

(3) Before Expiration of Period for Giving Notice or Filing Claim

Under some statutes payments made before expiration of the statutory time for giving notice or filing claim are at the owner's risk, but this is not true under other statutes.

Under some,⁸ but not other,⁹ statutes payments made by the owner before the expiration of the time allowed a subcontractor or materialman in which to give his notice or file his claim are at the owner's risk and cannot reduce or defeat the lien unless such payments are distributed among the subcontractors, laborers, and materialmen,¹⁰ or unless no notice is given by the lien claimant in ques-

tion¹¹ or by any lien claimant¹² within the statutory period

(4) After Notice or Knowledge of Claim

An owner's payment of the principal contractor after notice or knowledge of the claims of subcontractors, laborers, and materialmen will not affect or defeat the liens of the latter.

The rights of a subcontractor, materialman, or workman cannot be defeated or impaired by reason of any payment made to the contractor by the owner after the statutory notice of the claim has been filed or served on the owner,¹³ or, except in at least one jurisdiction,¹⁴ after the owner has actual knowledge or notice of such claim¹⁵ or of facts sufficient to put him on inquiry as to its existence;¹⁶ and this is true although the payment is made in accordance with the terms of the contract¹⁷ Sometimes the facts are not sufficient to bring the particular case within the rule,¹⁸ and in any event the payment cannot operate to give claimant rights which otherwise he would not have had¹⁹

c. Collusive or Fraudulent Payments

The owner's fraudulent or collusive payment to the principal contractor will not affect or defeat the lien of a subcontractor, laborer, or materialman.

A collusive payment by the owner to the contractor for the purpose of avoiding the provisions of the lien law will not be allowed to defeat or impair the lien of a subcontractor, laborer, or materialman,²⁰ regardless of whether such payment is made in advance of the time when due under the contract, as discussed supra subdivision b (2) of this section, or is made after such time²¹ It has been held that the fact that a payment was made to a creditor of a contractor on the false representation of such creditor that he had assumed all the contractor's debts does not make the payment fraudulent as against the subcontractors, and that the owner is not obliged to protect them until they give him the statutory notice²²

d. Statutory Duties of Owner

- (1) In general
- (2) Requiring statement or release
- (3) Retaining funds to meet claim

(1) In General

Under some statutes the owner is under a duty to see that payments made by him to the contractor are appropriated to the just claims of laborers and materialmen.

Under a few statutes, and the construction placed thereon, it is the duty of the owner to see that payments made by him to the contractor are, to the extent of the contract price, appropriated to the payment of valid and just claims of laborers and materialmen,²³ and he is or is not relieved of liability to the extent of such payments to the contractor accordingly as they are or are not appropriated to the payment of valid claims of laborers and materialmen,²⁴ his liability for the claims of laborers and materialmen, in any event, not to exceed the contract price, as discussed supra § 174.

(2) Requiring Statement or Release

Under some statutes payments made by an owner to a contractor cannot defeat or otherwise affect the lien claims of subcontractors, laborers, or materialmen where such payments have been made without first obtaining a statement or release of claims.

Purpose of some provisions is to give furnisher of labor and materials claim on owner, to compel owner at his peril to withhold final payment from contractor until owner has received assurance that contractor has paid all material and labor claims which are or which may be perfected into liens—Cutler-Hammer, Inc, v Wayne, CCA Ga., 101 F 2d 823, certiorari denied Wayne v. 24. Ga.—Green v Farrar Lumber Co, 46 SE 62, 119 Ga. 30.

Under some statutes it is the duty of the owner before making any payment to the contractor to require of him a verified statement of the names of persons furnishing labor or material and the amounts due or to become due to each,²⁵ and payments made without such statement or on an insufficient statement are not rightfully made and cannot defeat or reduce the claim of a subcontractor, etc., for a lien,²⁶ even though he does not serve statutory notice on the owner until after the payment,²⁷ or even though, according to some,²⁸ but not other,²⁹ authorities he wholly fails to serve on the owner a notice or detailed statement of his claim as provided for by statute. Under other statutes it has also been held that the risk of payment rests on an owner until expiration of the statutory period within which liens may be filed where he pays the principal contractor without obtaining the statutory statement from him.³⁰

The owner is protected, on the other hand, if he uses reasonable precautions in following the statutory provisions,³¹ he has a right to rely and act on a sworn statement in the form required by statute,³² even though it is false,³³ where he has no knowledge of its falsity³⁴ and claimant has not served him with the notice provided for by statute.³⁵ Under some circumstances,³⁶ as where nothing is due him at the time,³⁷ a claimant may not be injured by the making of a payment by the owner to the contractor without requiring the latter to furnish the statutory statement. Where mechanics' liens have been duly waived by a subcontractor or the like, the owner is not required to obtain the statutory statement before paying over money to the general contractor.³⁸

Under some of the statutes imposing on an owner the duty to see that payments made by him to the contractor are by the latter applied to payment of laborers and materialmen, as discussed supra subdivision d (1) of this section, it is further provided that an owner may, on paying the contractor, protect himself from liens for work done and material furnished on the employment of the contractor, by procuring from the contractor a sworn statement that the agreed price or reasonable value of such work or material has been paid,³⁹ and, if the owner produces such sworn statement of the contractor, a materialman is not thereafter entitled to foreclose his asserted lien.⁴⁰ Such a statute, however, contemplates only one affidavit of the contractor,⁴¹ namely, one made on the final completion of the work,⁴² and an owner paying the contractor in installments before the completion of the work cannot protect himself from liens by taking separate affidavits that all work done and materials furnished up to that time have been paid for.⁴³

Obtaining release of liens Where the statute requires the owner to procure from the contractor a verified release of liens before making payments to him, payments made without such release are not

(3) Retaining Funds to Meet Claim

Under some statutes the owner has the right and duty to retain funds to meet claims of subcontractors

Under some statutes the owner has the right, in self-protection, to retain enough of the original contract price to cover the liens of subcontractors ⁴⁵ Under other statutes a payment of any money by the owner to the contractor before all laborers, mechanics, and materialmen have been paid for work done or materials furnished does not relieve him from liability to such persons, ⁴⁶ and lien claimants have a right to assume that the owner will withhold from the general contractor sufficient funds to meet their claims for whatever period may be designated by statute ⁴⁷ It has also been held under some provisions that, where a materialman gives notice of his claim to the owner, sums due or to become due the principal contractor are regarded as a trust fund for the payment of such claim, and that in such case the owner is under a duty to retain a sufficient sum to meet the claim ⁴⁸

Under some statutes it is the duty of the owner to withhold a certain per cent of the contract price for a designated period to meet claims of subcontractors and the like, ⁴⁹ but such provisions do not protect lien claimants who do not come within the classes of persons enumerated by the statute as those for whose protection the per cent is to be retained. ⁵⁰ While there is some authority to the contrary, ⁵¹ it is generally held that a provision in a contract giving an owner the right to retain a portion of the contract price until a certain time is for the benefit of the owner and may be waived by him and payment made in advance of that time without incurring any liability to subcontractors and others ⁵² Under statutes providing that all payments made by the owner to the principal contractor within a prescribed period shall be at the owner's risk, and that no owner shall be liable to such contractor until expiration of such period, it has been held that the contract price constitutes a fund for payment of subcontractors and materialmen which it is the owner's duty to see is properly distributed ⁵³

§ 252. Payment to Subcontractors, Laborers, or Materialmen as Affecting Lien of Other Persons

Payments made to discharge the liens of subcontractors, laborers, or materialmen may be effective to reduce or defeat the claims of the principal contractor.

Payments made by the owner to discharge valid liens of subcontractors, laborers, or materialmen are effective to reduce or defeat the claim of the principal contractor ⁵⁴ The rule has been held to be applicable where the lien discharged has been carried to final judgment, ⁵⁵ or, provided it is valid, ⁵⁶ where claimant has taken the necessary steps to perfect the lien ⁵⁷ or has commenced an action to enforce it, ⁵⁸ even though final judgment has not been rendered ⁵⁹ When the lien has been pressed to judg-

Protection of owner

The statute providing that owner may withhold from his contractor as much of the contract price as may be necessary to meet demands for labor or materials for which contractor is liable to third persons, is for the protection of owners against defaulting contractors, and the provisions of the contract for payments to be made to the contractor will be construed in accordance with the rights of the owner as provided for by the statute—First Church of Christ, Scientist, v Lawrence, 297 N.W. 99, 210 Minn. 37

ment, the owner may set off against the contractor the amount of the judgment,⁶⁰ including not only the amount of the claim for labor or materials, but also interest,⁶¹ costs,⁶² and attorney's fees.⁶³ However, where the filing of a lien by a subcontractor was due to the owner's refusal to pay an order on him given by the contractor to the subcontractor for the amount of his claim, the owner being at the time of such refusal indebted to the contractor in an amount exceeding the amount of the order, the owner can offset against the contractor only the amount of the lien claim proper and not the costs and expenses incident to the lien.⁶⁴

While it has been held that payments made by the owner to subcontractors without the contractor's knowledge or assent and before the subcontractors have taken the necessary steps to perfect their liens and impose a direct liability on the owner are not available to defeat or reduce the claim of the contractor,⁶⁵ it has also been held that, where the contractor has defaulted in the performance of his contract, the owner is justified in paying and charging to the contractor such claims as might be the subject of liens without waiting for them to be perfected and established,⁶⁶ although even in such case the owner is not justified in paying and charging to the contractor whatever amounts are claimed by persons who have furnished labor or materials, but only the amounts to which they are properly and legally entitled.⁶⁷

within a certain time after being notified of the claim of his journeyman or other person on the owner for work performed, a payment made to a claimant after the lapse of the time specified, and before the contractor has notified his dissent to the owner, will be binding as between the two latter.⁶⁸ A general contractor is not a mere volunteer in paying a materialman before the latter has prosecuted his lien to judgment,⁶⁹ and the general contractor may be entitled to set off, as against a subcontractor's assignee, the amount he has theretofore paid the original subcontractor for materials furnished by the latter.⁷⁰ The mere assumption by one other than the owner of the obligation to pay a materialman does not of itself extinguish his statutory lien.⁷¹

§ 253. — Liens of Other Subcontractors, Laborers, or Materialmen

Payments made to subcontractors, laborers and materialmen who were entitled to file liens may be allowed in reduction of the amount allowable for liens of other such persons, but the fact that a subcontractor has been paid in full will not necessarily preclude one who has furnished labor or material to him from enforcing a lien.

Payments made to subcontractors, materialmen, or laborers who were entitled to file liens and would have filed them but for such payment should be allowed to the owner in reduction of the amount available for the liens of other subcontractors, materialmen, or laborers,⁷² at least under some circumstances,⁷³ but the rule is otherwise where the payment was made in advance of the time when due.⁷⁴

or with notice or knowledge on the part of the owner of the claims of other persons⁷⁵ Except in a few jurisdictions⁷⁶ the fact that a subcontractor has been paid in full does not prevent a person who has furnished labor or material to him from enforcing a lien,⁷⁷ at least where there is still something due from the owner to the principal contractor⁷⁸ Some statutes relating to stop notices, discussed supra § 114, do not render a contractor who has made advance payments to a subcontractor liable to persons who are employees or materialmen of the subcontractor and who have served stop notices⁷⁹

VII. STIPULATIONS FOR PAYMENT OF CLAIMS AND INDEMNITY AGAINST LIENS

§ 255. Contracts and Stipulations in General

Contract provisions for the retention by or for the owner of all or a part of the contract price until claims for work or materials have been paid, or liens therefor discharged, are for the benefit of the owner and the surety and not of laborers or materialmen.

Contract provisions imposing on the contractor the duty of protecting the owner against mechanics' liens inure to the benefit of the owner⁸⁶ and make a compliance therewith by the contractor a condition precedent to recovery by him in a suit to foreclose

a lien,⁸⁷ but they do not impair the rights of third persons furnishing materials to the contractor,⁸⁸ and according to some,⁸⁹ although not other,⁹⁰ authorities they do not increase the rights of such persons

the owner⁹¹ and the surety,⁹² rather than of laborers, materialmen, or subcontractors,⁹³ and not to confer on the latter any rights in the fund retained,⁹⁴ although laborers and materialmen have been held entitled to rely on a clause of the contract providing for the retention by the owner of a certain portion of the money due the contractor for a stipulated period after completion of the work.⁹⁵ Such provisions, and similar statutory provisions, do not apply to payments made in completing the work after the contractor's default.⁹⁶

An agreement by a contractor to give his bond to protect the owner against mechanics' liens is, in order to avoid circuity of action, regarded as tantamount to an agreement not to assert a mechanic's lien,⁹⁷ but his agreement to give a surety bond against mechanics' liens, up to a stated proportion of the amount of the contract, is not so construed.⁹⁸ Where there are claims against a contractor for materials and labor, his failure to furnish the bond required of him by the contract excuses payment of installments due for work completed until such bond is furnished.⁹⁹ Where a materialman, in reliance on the promise of one financing the contractor to accept the contractor's order to pay the materialman's claim, refrained from taking steps to insure the payment of the debt under the contractor's bond, the promisor is estopped to deny liability.¹ Where a mortgagor assigns future rents to satisfy a materialman's lien on the mortgaged premises, the materialman's claim is required to be satisfied from such assignment.²

A statute governing an owner's personal liability to subcontractors has been held not exclusive, and the owner may guarantee a subcontractor's account by agreement.³ In the absence of a statute fixing a personal liability on a building owner for materials or supplies furnished to a subcontractor, an owner is under no obligation to give notice to subcontractors of his guaranty to a materialman of payment for materials supplied the original contractor.⁴ While the owners of property subject to mechanics' liens may not affect the liens by contract, an agreement allocating the lien to part of the property has been held enforceable as between the grantors and a purchaser and all who purchase after recordation of the deed containing such contract or after actual notice thereof.⁵

Actions Where persons contracting for the erection of a building covenant to indemnify the contractor against loss by his waiver of a mechanic's lien in consideration of his guaranty that the cost will not exceed a certain sum, the contractor cannot maintain an action against them without showing performance of the agreement as to cost.⁶ Where a lien is filed against the property, the owner may recover against the contractor for breach of his contract to furnish material and labor, or to keep the property free from liens, even though the owner has not paid the lien claimant's bill.⁷ In actions on contract provisions imposing on the contractor the duty of protecting the owner against mechanics' liens, adjudications have been made with respect to the burden of proof⁸ and the admissibility of evidence.⁹

Attorney's fees. Where a building contract provides in one clause that the contractor shall reimburse the owner for reasonable attorney's fees paid by him as a result of the contract, and in another clause for payment of such fees of not less than a stated per cent of the amount involved, a reasonable fee will be allowed, but not less than such per cent, and more than such per cent should be allowed only where the value of the services is clearly shown to be more,¹⁰ and the amount involved in any controversy is the bona fide difference between the parties to the litigation, and is measured by the amount of money required to adjust that difference.¹¹ A contract containing a no-lien clause and giving the owner the right, in case there should be evidence of a lien, to retain a sum sufficient to indemnify him does not cover counsel fees incurred by him in resisting a lien.¹²

§ 256. Bonds or Undertakings in General

The effect of an owner's failure to exact from the contractor, as required by statute, a bond conditioned that the latter shall faithfully perform his contract, pay all claims for labor and materials, and indemnify the owner against liens arising out of the work varies with the language of the statutes.

Independently of statute, the owner may require a bond,¹³ and it is a very usual practice that in connection with a building contract the contractor shall execute to the owner a bond with sureties conditioned that the contractor shall faithfully perform his contract, pay all claims for labor and materials, and indemnify the owner against liens arising out of the work.¹⁴ Under some statutes, the effect of a failure of the owner to take such a bond is, with respect to private improvements, that the liens of persons other than the contractor may be enforced for the value of the labor or material without being limited to the contract price agreed on between the owner and the contractor,¹⁵ and the same result follows where the owner takes a bond which fails to conform to the statutory requirements¹⁶ Under other statutes the effect of a failure of the owner to exact the bond is that he becomes personally liable for any balance due from the contractor to laborers and materialmen,¹⁷ or liable to them to the same extent as the surety would have been,¹⁸ provided they conform to the statutory requirements as to recording their claims and serving notice on the owner,¹⁹ since otherwise the owner is not bound to them²⁰

Limitation of liens to contract price generally see supra § 174

Purpose of statute permitting owner to require principal contractor to execute bond is to enable owner to protect himself against liens that may be acquired against his property in aggregate exceeding contract price and to make surety liable only if aggregate of liens exceeds contract

Under some statutes the contractor is not required to execute a bond and the owner is not required to exact one,²¹ the parties being at liberty to contract in this respect²² and to waive the execution of a bond²³ Where no bond is given, and no material is furnished on the faith that a bond has been executed, no rights accrue to materialmen under statute,²⁴ and even where the contract calls for the execution of a bond, but none is executed, the owner is under no duty to notify materialmen of such want of execution,²⁵ so that the owner's permitting the contractor to proceed with the construction

without executing a bond does not operate as an estoppel in favor of materialmen²⁶ The fact that a bond taken by an owner from the contractor does not protect a materialman's claim does not render the owner liable for the payment thereof²⁷

The duty of fair dealing and good faith toward the surety is imposed on the owner²⁸ The rights of the surety as to provisions protecting materialmen can rise no higher than those of materialmen²⁹

Bond to protect mortgagee or purchaser of mortgage bonds Where the owner of a lot mortgaged it for funds to erect a building thereon, and gave a bond to protect the mortgagee against mechanic's liens, the bond making no reference to the use to be made of the money, the fund is free from any claim or equity in favor of the surety,³⁰ and applying it in favor of other than lienable claims does not relieve him from liability on the bond³¹ A bond indemnifying the purchaser of mortgage bonds against a direct loss caused by the owner's failure to erect a building does not cover the owner's liability for labor and materials used in erecting a building³²

§ 257. Requisites and Validity of Bond

- a In general

- c Consideration
- d Provisions and conditions
- e Amount
- f Execution and filing or recording

a. In General

A contractor's bond may be valid as a common-law bond even though it does not follow statutory requirements or complies with an unconstitutional statute.

A building contractor and his surety have a legal right to make any bond, acceptable to the owner, which they see fit to make.³³ A contractor's bond providing for payment of claims for labor and material, entered into voluntarily and for a valuable consideration, and not repugnant to the letter or policy of the law, is a valid common-law bond, even though the requirements of a statute are not followed³⁴ or even though there is a full compliance with a statute³⁵ which is unconstitutional.³⁶ Where sureties undertake the completion of the contract, they cannot thereafter assert the invalidity of the bond,³⁷ particularly where they receive progress payments as they become due.³⁸

b. Parties

While statutory requirements, as to the parties to contractors' bonds should be observed, immaterial or inadvertent errors in the designation of the parties do not affect the validity of the bond or the liability of the surety.

In order to constitute a statutory bond, the persons for whose benefit the statute requires the bond to be executed must be designated with reasonable certainty as the obligees,³⁹ however, the omission of the word "owner"⁴⁰ or the name of the owner⁴¹ in one clause of the bond is not fatal where it is a mere clerical error and the required information is contained in another clause. The fact that the surety's name does not appear in the recitals of the bond does not affect its validity or his liability, if it is otherwise properly executed and signed by him and if the bond and the circumstances clearly show an intention to charge him,⁴² nor does the failure of the contractors to sign the bond as principals⁴³ or the inadvertent insertion of the building owner's name in the body of the bond⁴⁴ affect the liability of the surety thereon. Under at least one statute, claimants must present their objections, if any, to the sufficiency or solvency of the surety on the bond within a specified number of days after the institution of a concursus proceeding by the owner.⁴⁵

Where a contractor's bond for the payment of claims is executed and filed pursuant to the statute, it is immaterial what interest the nominal obligee has,⁴⁶ or whether he has any interest,⁴⁷ in the land on which the building is to be constructed, if he is the person who, as owner, has contracted to have the building constructed. While, as a general rule, the same person cannot be both obligor and obligee in the bond,⁴⁸ it has been held that the fact that one of several obligees is also a surety on the bond does not prevent the bond from being operative in

It is no defense to a surety that a bond covering a private contract is, for some unexplained reason, in the form required by the statute for public work—F G Schaeffer Iron Works v Standard Accident Ins Co, DC N J, 2 F Supp 764

Compulsion of void statute

In order to avoid contractor's lawful bond, importing consideration, as given under compulsion of unconstitutional statute, surety must show that bond was executed solely on such compulsion, and that rights secured belonged to maker without such compliance, recital in bond that purpose was to secure faithful performance of contract in compliance with statutes which, to presumed knowledge of makers, had been declared unconstitutional, did not show that it was executed solely on compulsion of such statutes—Fife v Indemnity Ins Co of North America, Tex Civ App, 283 S W 645 favor of another obligee in respect of an obligation independent of that owing to the obligee who signed as surety⁴⁹ Where a contractor's bond, given for the use of all persons performing labor or furnishing materials in the building of a house, recites that the principal is a corporation, the sureties cannot escape liability on the ground that the principal had no legal existence as a corporation⁵⁰ and that the persons assuming to act for it in the premises had no authority so to do⁵¹

Estoppel to deny mistake Where a contractor, when applying for a bond, knew the owner of the lot, and gave the name of the owner's husband, as beneficiary or obligee, as the result of negligence or fraud, he and his surety are estopped to deny that the bond was executed in favor of the husband as the result of mutual mistake or that it was the parties' intention that the bond guarantee the performance of the contract with the wife.⁵²

The consideration supporting the contractor's promise in the building contract is sufficient to bind sureties in his bond given contemporaneously with such contract.

A contractor's bond must be supported by a sufficient consideration⁵³ The same consideration which is sufficient to support the promise or undertaking of the contractor in the building contract is sufficient to bind sureties in the contractor's bond against mechanics' liens, given contemporaneously with the making and delivery of the contract⁵⁴ An antecedent promise of a contractor to give a bond indemnifying against liens is a sufficient consideration for the execution of such a bond subsequent to the execution of the building contract,⁵⁵ and either before⁵⁶ or after⁵⁷ the commencement of work thereunder, but in the absence of some such antecedent agreement no action can be maintained against a surety on a bond given by a builder to indemnify the owner against loss where the bond is given after the execution of the contract and the commencement of the work by the builder, unless the bond is supported by some new consideration⁵⁸

The payment to subcontractors of the amount of their lien claims is not a sufficient consideration for a bond given by them to indemnify the owner against the liens of other subcontractors⁵⁹

d. Provisions and Conditions

In order to render available to the owner the exemption from, or limitation of, liability resulting from the taking of a statutory bond, the bond must be conditioned as provided by statute.

In order to render available to the owner the exemption from, or limitation of, liability resulting from the taking of a contractor's statutory bond, the bond must be conditioned as provided by statute⁶⁰ The bond may be valid even though it provides for, or guarantees, the payment of claims which cannot be asserted as liens against the property improved⁶¹ A provision in the bond limiting the time for bringing suit thereon may be upheld when, and only when, it is not unreasonable⁶² and does not violate a statutory prohibition⁶³ The fact that no statute authorizes or requires a provision for the protection of third persons in construction contracts, other than for public works, does not prevent the parties from inserting in the bond a provision for the protection of third persons⁶⁴

A bond for less than the statutory amount, while insufficient as a statutory bond, may nevertheless be valid so that materialmen can sue thereon

While the fact that the amount of the bond is less than that prescribed by statute prevents the bond from being sufficient as a statutory bond,⁶⁵ and from being available as an exemption from, or limitation of, the liability of the owner,⁶⁶ it does not affect the validity of the bond⁶⁷ or prevent the materialmen or their assignees from maintaining an action to recover on the bond,⁶⁸ to the extent of the amount thereof⁶⁹ Certainly the obligors have no ground of complaint,⁷⁰ as the bond is less onerous than it otherwise would have been⁷¹ and they cannot be injured by the insufficiency of the bond to protect the owner⁷²

f. Execution and Filing or Recording

While failure to file or record the bond as required by statute renders the owner liable as though no bond had been given, such failure does not affect the validity of the bond or the contract of suretyship.

Except as bearing on the question of consideration, discussed supra subdivision c of this section, it is immaterial whether the bond is executed before or after the execution of the contract between the owner and the contractor⁷³ or the execution of a mortgage on the premises⁷⁴ The signers of the bond are not released because other persons who they understood would sign did not do so, unless the obligee knew that they signed with such understanding⁷⁵ It is immaterial whether blanks in the bond were filled in after it was signed, since the person signing must be understood to intrust

There should be compliance with statutes requiring the bond to be filed or recorded within a specified time,⁷⁷ and, where they are not so filed and recorded, the owner is liable to the same extent as though no bond had been given,⁷⁸ but a failure to comply with the statutes in this respect does not affect the validity of the bond⁷⁹ or the contract of suretyship,⁸⁰ nor does it relieve the sureties of liability for the claims of materialmen or laborers⁸¹ or others,⁸² and the owner, under at least one statute, becomes bound in solido with the contractor and the surety for the payment of the claims of the mechanics and materialmen⁸³

Likewise while, under particular statutes, the failure to file the original contract and specifications within a prescribed time may result in the liability of the owner for the claims of laborers and materialmen not being limited,⁸⁴ the bond is valid and binding on the sureties⁸⁵ in respect of the claims of materialmen⁸⁶ in the absence of a stipulation in the bond that the contract shall be filed as a condition precedent to the liability of the sureties⁸⁷ Under at least one statute the owner's failure to record the bond makes the contractor the agent of the owner, and makes the latter's property liable for all perfected liens for materials furnished therefor⁸⁸

§ 258. Construction and Effect of Bond in General

The bond of a contractor must be construed in connection with the contract and in accordance with the parties' intentions. The terms of the statute are to be read into a statutory bond and control its interpretation and effect.

The bond of a contractor indemnifying the owner against claims for labor and material must be construed in connection with the building contract,⁸⁹ particularly where the bond provides that the contract shall constitute a part of it,⁹⁰ and this is also true as to plans and specifications referred to in, and made part of, the bond,⁹¹ and the bond must be construed in the light of the statutes in force at the time of its execution,⁹² such as statutes providing for the protection of persons furnishing material and labor in the erection of a building.⁹³

In construing the language of the bond, effect must be given to the intention of the parties, if that intention can be found from the language employed,⁹⁴ notwithstanding less ambiguous language might have been used.⁹⁵ Every provision in the bond is to be given effect if that can reasonably be done.⁹⁶

It has been held that the rules of interpretation governing insurance contracts are applicable to guaranty or indemnity bonds of building contractors,⁹⁷ that the rules of interpretation governing guaranty insurance are applicable where the suretyship is not gratuitous but the surety is a company organized for the purpose of furnishing security for hire,⁹⁸ and that the contract of a paid surety on a building contractor's bond is to be construed most strongly against the surety⁹⁹ since it is in the nature of a contract of insurance.¹ However, the obligation of a contractor's bond for the payment of claims is absolute² and not merely an offer of guaranty requiring notice of acceptance³ The rules of law governing an ordinary contract of suretyship are not to be applied indiscriminately⁴

The mere fact that the owner holds the bond of a surety company to indemnify him against any loss resulting to him from the default of the contractor does not effect a change in the relation between the owner and a subcontractor,⁵ but a contractor's bond to the owner, permitting subcontractors, materialmen, and laborers to sue thereon, has been held to relieve the premises of their liens⁶ Also the execution of a bond by the contractor to the owner to indemnify him against the claims of a subcontractor does not seem to imply an agreement on the part of the owner that the subcontractor shall be paid so that he may not make payment to the contractor even in accordance with the terms of the contract without seeing that the subcontractor's claims are satisfied,⁷ but, where a building contractor has covenanted to keep a building free from liens for a time extending beyond the time fixed for making the last payment, neither he nor his sureties can require the last payment if he is then in default,⁸ and under the terms of some contracts and bonds executed pursuant thereto the owner is estopped, as against persons who have unpaid claims for labor and materials, to assert an equitable right to a trust fund created for the purpose of erecting the building or making the improvement in question⁹ A bond indemnifying the owner against liens has been construed as having no bearing on the right of the contractor to recover in an ordinary action for extra work¹⁰

A statutory bond performs a double function,¹¹ it secures, in the first place, to the owner the faithful performance of the contract by the contractor,¹² and, in the second place, it is intended to protect third persons from whom the contractor obtains materials and labor¹³ The statute and the bond for which it provides should be construed together,¹⁴ the terms of the statute are to be read into the bond¹⁵ and control its interpretation and ef-

Public work; lien not conferred or removed

(1) Statutes requiring a contractor's bond for the protection of persons furnishing labor or material for state, municipal, or other public work do not confer the right to a lien—In re Schilling, DC Ohio, 251 F 966—40 C J p 58 note 45 [c] (1)

(2) The federal statute providing for bonds in favor of those who furnish labor or material in the construction of public works is a recognition by congress of the inability of persons supplying contractors for public works with labor and materials to take liens on the public property of the United States, and is a substitute for a mechanics' lien law US—U S v Ansonia Brass & Copper Co, Va, 31 S Ct 49, 218 US 452, 54 L Ed 1107

(4) A statute providing that a contractor on public work shall give bond, on which any person having a claim for work or material may sue, does not take from the laborer or materialman his right to a mechanic's lien on a public building—Jewell County v Snodgrass & Young Mfg Co, 34 P 741, 52 Kan 253

(2) Statutes relating to such bonds preempt the entire field, so that all provisions outside the statutes must be stricken, only where the bond is given solely and exclusively thereunder—Standard Accident Ins Co v Knox, Civ App, 181 SW 2d 863, reversed on other grounds 184 SW 2d 612, 144 Tex 296

(3) Statutory requirement that contractor's bond shall provide for prompt payment to laborers and ma-

fect,¹⁶ and the bond becomes a part of the contract¹⁷ so that the language of the bond is to be interpreted by treating the contract and the bond as constituting an indivisible contract¹⁸

Under at least one statute, the effect of taking the bond provided for by statute, and its timely filing, is that the court must, where it is equitable to do so, restrict the recovery under liens of persons other than the contractor to an aggregate amount equal to the amount due from the owner to the contractor,¹⁹ and, if the bond as given does not meet the requirements of the statute, the only penalty is that the materialmen, etc., can have liens on the property of the owner irrespective of contract price.²⁰ Under other statutes the effect of the bond is that the owner escapes the personal liability to the laborers and materialmen²¹ which, as discussed supra § 256, would be imposed on him if he did not require the bond, or that funds due the contractor are released from an equity or trust in favor of materialmen and laborers and go into the hands of the contractor untrammelled.²² A bond indicating by its terms that it is intended to be in compliance with the statute will be treated as a statutory bond,²³ conversely, a bond whose terms do not indicate such intention will not be so treated,²⁴ nor is a bond a

A retroactive construction will not be given to a bond, so as to make it apply to prior obligations, where a contrary intention of the parties appears on its face,²⁷ nor will a statute be construed as requiring a retroactive or retrospective bond unless the legislative intention to do so is clearly expressed.²⁸

What law governs Where a building contract is made and is to be performed in a particular state, and the bond states that it is made for the benefit of persons who may establish a lien for material furnished, or labor performed, for the contractor, under the laws of that state, the nature, validity, and interpretation of the bond must be governed by the laws of that state.²⁹ Where a bond and contract are executed in one state, to be performed partly in that state and partly in another, the interpretation of the contract is governed by the laws of the former state.³⁰

The liability of the sureties on a contractor's bond ordinarily is limited by the terms of their undertaking

Where it is sought to recover from the sureties on a building contractor's bond for claims or liens, or damage or loss resulting therefrom, their liability cannot be extended beyond the terms of their contract³¹ unless it is otherwise provided by statute,³² and the liability of the surety is not determined by a stipulation between the owner and the contractor with respect to the furnishing of a bond³³ In ascertaining the terms of the bond, the same rules of construction must be applied as in other contracts,³⁴ and when the matters for which recovery is sought come within the terms of the undertaking the sureties are liable,³⁵ notwithstanding the surety received no compensation³⁶ In order to establish a pecuniary loss by the contractor's breach in failing to deliver it on time and free of valid liens, the owner must show a loss incurred or paid because of liens fastened on the building or for which he was liable³⁷ The owner cannot recover against the sureties on an indemnity bond for payments made by him which were entirely voluntary and without compulsion³⁸

It has been held that a judgment establishing a lien is conclusive against the sureties,³⁹ under other authority such a judgment is not conclusive, but is prima facie evidence, against the surety,⁴⁰ who remains at liberty to contest its own liability by establishing affirmatively that the principal is not liable⁴¹ Where the judgment has been satisfied, the sureties are liable⁴² unless the owner neglected to interpose a valid defense in the foreclosure suit⁴³

Where a bond of indemnity is given to a person who lends money to the owner, there can be no recovery on the bond because of liens filed where the lender, without authority from the owner, retains, in order to satisfy another debt, an amount exceeding what would be required to satisfy the liens,⁴⁴ but where a contract for the erection of a building provides that the owner shall withhold a certain per cent of the contract price until the building is completed and also for damages for delay in completion, and the contractor fails to complete the building in the time agreed on, thus subjecting himself to the payment of damages for the delay, and also abandons the work before it is finished, the sureties on the contractor's bond cannot successfully contend that they are not liable to respond to an action on the bond until the owner has paid the full contract price, predicating such contention on the fact that the owner has withheld the amount of damages due him for delay,⁴⁵ since he is not required to leave his own claim unpaid and apply the money for the benefit of the sureties⁴⁶

Status of particular claim or lien Under some bonds, and the construction placed thereon, it has been held that liability exists for unpaid claims, regardless of whether or not they are lienable,⁴⁷ that a cause of action accrues in favor of the obligee as soon as he is compelled to pay claims,⁴⁸ that the owner is entitled to recover on the bond where, in order to prevent the filing of liens, he pays claims for work and materials which the original contractor has failed to pay,⁴⁹ even though he makes such payments before liens are actually filed,⁵⁰ litigated,⁵¹ or reduced to judgment,⁵² and that liability on the part of the surety exists where a judgment foreclosing a lien has been recovered but not paid⁵³ Under other bonds, and the construction placed thereon, it has been held that there is no liability by reason of the mere existence of an unpaid claim for which no lien has been perfected,⁵⁴ or by reason of the payment of claims, as distinguished from liens,⁵⁵ or of claims for which the owner was not liable⁵⁶ and which could not become liens,⁵⁷ or of alleged liens which are invalid and unenforceable.⁵⁸

In considering these divergent holdings it must be borne in mind that some bonds are construed to afford indemnity against liability, and not merely against loss,⁵⁹ and that there is a breach of such a bond as soon as any liens are acquired,⁶⁰ while other bonds are construed to be strict indemnity bonds against loss or damage,⁶¹ and a breach of a bond of the latter character does not occur on the mere filing of a lien,⁶² but only when the obligee has been actually damaged⁶³

b. Release or Discharge of Sureties

- (1) In general
- (2) Alteration of, or departure from, contract generally
- (3) Payment or failure to pay

(1) In General

A subcontractor or materialman may waive his rights against the contractor's surety, but his mere waiver or release of his lien, or his right thereto, generally does not release or impair his right to proceed on the bond.

Sureties on contractors' bonds have been held not to be released or discharged by the fact that the surety and the owner were ignorant of the fact that the contractor had a partner,⁶⁴ by a dissolution or change in the personnel of the contracting firm,⁶⁵ by the execution by the owner of a statutory bond to discharge a mechanic's lien asserted against the property,⁶⁶ by the execution of a note to the sureties by the owner in consideration of their cancellation of a lien filed by them,⁶⁷ by the failure of the architect to sign the certificate of the cost of completing the work after the contractor's default,⁶⁸ by the contractor's disclaimer of liability for debts of the subcontractor,⁶⁹ or by various other acts or circumstances.⁷⁰ The fact that the contractor waives, against the owner, all claims for particular work does not relieve the surety of his obligation to the materialman supplying the articles involved.⁷¹

Waiver of lien or of right against surety A subcontractor or materialman may waive his rights against the contractor's surety.⁷² However, a subcontractor's or materialman's agreement with the contractor or surety to waive or release his lien or right of lien generally does not release or impair his right to proceed on the contractor's bond.⁷³

at least where the surety suffered no injury from such waiver,⁷⁴ but the surety has been held released where such waiver induced payment by the owner to the principal contractor and destroyed the surety's right to be subrogated to the materialman's lien.⁷⁵ Where a building contract did not require a written audit or certificate from the architect for the payment of damages recoverable on the contractor's bond, the obligation of the surety on the bond of the contractor, in an action of a subcontractor thereon, is not affected because the owner recovered damages, and by the sum so recovered reduced the amount in his hands applicable to the payment of the subcontractor's claim.⁷⁶

Giving of notice. The surety is not released by the failure of the owner to give him notice of certain matters where no provision for such notice is contained in either the contract or the bond,⁷⁷ or where, although there is such a provision in the bond, the facts do not bring the case within it,⁷⁸ or it has been waived by the surety,⁷⁹ or where the surety had full knowledge of the circumstances⁸⁰ or sustained no loss through the failure to give notice.⁸¹ Also the failure to give the surety notice does not relieve him from liability for liens where the notice is essential only in order to render him liable for the fidelity of the contractor in carrying out the contract.⁸² It has been held that a contractor who has seen the work performed and the material furnished in constructing the building is not in a situation to deny his liability on the ground that he has not been notified and that the surety on his bond is in the same position.⁸³

Transfer of ownership of the premises does not release the surety on a bond indemnifying against mechanics' liens where it assented to the transfer and the grantee became a principal in the bond jointly with the grantor,⁸⁴ nor can the surety complain of changes in the title occurring after its liability on the bond has attached by the filing of the lien and its failure to take prompt steps to cause a release.⁸⁵

Statutory bond. Where a bond has been taken under the provisions of a statute and inures to the benefit of persons from whom the contractor obtains labor and materials, an owner who releases the surety⁸⁶ or by his acts brings about a situation in which it would be unconscionable to hold the surety to his obligations⁸⁷ becomes liable to the same extent to which he would have if he had not required any bond. However, unauthorized acts of the owner which may be sufficient to release the surety on such a bond as against the owner may not be sufficient to release him as against laborers and materialmen.⁸⁸ Where the statute fixes no period of time for the duration of the surety's responsibility, he is not released from liability to a materialman until the latter's claim has been paid or has become prescribed as provided by law.⁸⁹

(2) Alteration of, or Departure from, Contract Generally

Any material alteration of, or departure from, the building contract without the surety's consent ordinarily discharges him from liability for claims or liens for labor or materials.

Under the rule governing the liability of sureties on building contractors' bonds generally, any material alteration of, or departure from, the building contract without the consent of the surety will discharge or release him from liability for claims or liens for labor or materials,⁹⁰ notwithstanding he may have sustained no injury by the change⁹¹ or even though such alteration was designed for his benefit or was to his advantage.⁹² However, the surety is not necessarily released or discharged by every change in, or departure from, the contract,⁹³ especially as against laborers and materialmen⁹⁴ or where the bond has been given under a statute,⁹⁵ particularly a statute providing that no modification of a building contract shall release or exonerate the surety.⁹⁶ Where a building contract authorizes the owner, during the progress of the work, to request alterations, the surety is presumed to have known of the provision and to have agreed to be bound thereby.⁹⁷

(3) Payment or Failure to Pay

The surety on a contractor's bond is generally held to be released where the owner makes payments to the contractor not in conformity with the contract; but under some authorities the surety on a bond protecting laborers and materialmen, as well as the owner, is not discharged as to the former by such payments.

A surety cannot be discharged because of payments made by the owner in pursuance of, or not departing from, the provisions of the contract,⁹⁸ and the fact that the owner, in making payment under the contract, has taken precautions not required by the contract does not release the contractor's sureties from liability.⁹⁹ On the other hand, sureties on a contractor's bond to keep an owner harmless from mechanics' liens are released by the failure of the owner to pay the contractor according to agreement before default by the contractor.¹ Also it has been held that the surety is released where the owner makes payments not in conformity with the contract,² as where he makes payments in advance³ or without withholding a proportion of the price to protect himself against claims and liens of subcontractors, materialmen, and others according to the provisions of the contract,⁴ but in a number of cases the rule has been held not applicable,⁵ and it has been held in some,⁶ although not other,⁷ cases that, where the bond is conditioned for the payment of claims for labor and material as well as for the protection of the owner, the sureties are not discharged from liability to persons furnishing labor and materials by reason of the owner's having made such payments, the theory being that the liability created by the bond in favor of such persons is independent of that assumed by the obligee and cannot be affected by the latter's subsequent acts.⁸ An architect cannot, without the surety's consent, bind the surety by changing the terms of the contract with respect to payment of the contractor, so as to prevent the surety from claiming a breach of the contract.⁹

An owner who enters into an agreement modifying the building contract as to payments cannot claim reimbursement from the surety for a loss sustained by reason of such modification,¹⁰ and payments made by the owner in violation of a statute release the sureties to the extent thereof.¹¹

A payment by the owner directly to a claimant or his assignee relieves the sureties to the extent thereof,¹² but does not entirely relieve them from their obligations,¹³ as the payment is beneficial, rather than prejudicial, to them.¹⁴ A subcontractor's acceptance of the contractor's written obligation does not preclude it from recovering on the contractor's bond, since such a taking is not a payment of its claim, in the absence of a special agreement to that effect,¹⁵ also a materialman's acceptance of the contractor's promissory note does not release the surety¹⁶ unless there is an agreement that the note is to constitute payment of the indebtedness¹⁷

An extension of time for payment given to the contractor by a materialman who might in the first instance have fixed the time of the maturity of his claim without the knowledge or consent of the surety does not release the surety,¹⁸ and the taking of a trade acceptance by a materialman from the contractor has been held not such an extension of time for payment as to release the surety,¹⁹ likewise, where a contract to furnish material is silent as to the time of payment, the taking of a note with a fixed maturity date is not an extension of time for payment so as to release the surety, but merely establishes the maturity of a previously indefinite obligation²⁰

A general statute providing that the prolongation of the terms granted to the principal debtor without the surety's consent discharges the latter does not apply to a general surety on a contractor's bond for labor and materials to be furnished at a future time by persons then unknown and on terms which could only be agreed on later²¹ In the absence of proof of the law of the state in which the bond was made, the law of the forum governs the question whether an extension of credit to the contractor releases the surety²²

work on the latter's default, is responsible to the owner for liens thereafter imposed on the property.

Where the sureties on a contractor's bond, after the abandonment of the contract by their principal, take over the work or employ another builder to complete it, they assume the relation of principal obligors as to the work thereafter done²³ and are responsible to the owner for liens thereafter imposed on the property by reason of the debts of their employee²⁴ While a surety assuming charge of the work is liable for work done to replace defective work previously done by a subcontractor and not constituting a substantial performance of the subcontract,²⁵ he has been held not liable for the work previously done²⁶ even though the contractor, after surrendering the work to the surety, agreed that both items should be allowed,²⁷ and the surety has been held not to assume the obligation already due a materialman from the contractor.²⁸

On the other hand, the surety may be liable on mechanics' liens accruing before the default,²⁹ and the terms of the surety's agreement with the owner may be such as to make the surety liable to all materialmen³⁰ Where the owner paid claims of mechanics and materialmen, with the knowledge and consent, and at the instance and request, of the building contractor's sureties who had undertaken the completion of the building, he is entitled to recover from them the amount so paid.³¹

A surety taking over the work is not entitled to a mechanic's lien by reason of payments made by it³²

§ 261. — Measure and Limit of Recovery

The surety's liability cannot exceed the penalty or amount named in the bond. In a proper case the recovery against the surety may include interest, as well as costs and expenses, including attorney's fees, incurred in defending foreclosure suits.

The liability of the surety on a contractor's bond cannot exceed the penalty or amount named in the bond³³. Also, where the bond is one of indemnity against loss or damage, a person suing on the bond cannot recover more in damages than the loss actually suffered,³⁴ the owner is not entitled to recover as against the obligors in the bond the full amount of liens claimed as soon as they become established under the law as liens on the building,³⁵ but it is necessary for him to pay off and discharge the liens before he can recover more than nominal damages for a breach of the bond³⁶. Ordinarily the amount which a subcontractor can recover on a statutory bond is the contract price³⁷.

In a proper case the recovery against the surety may include interest³⁸ although the bond guaranteeing performance of the contract does not expressly provide therefor,³⁹ as well as costs and expenses incurred in defending foreclosure suits,⁴⁰ including attorney's fees,⁴¹ whether or not such fees have actually been paid, as long as the obligation to pay them has been incurred⁴². cases,⁴⁴ attorney's fees have been held not recoverable; and it has been held that items cannot be recovered as costs incurred in the lien suit where they were not taxed or legally taxable as such.⁴⁵ Of course, where the facts show that there is no liability on the bond, the question whether a recovery might properly include attorney's fees does not arise.⁴⁶ Where a statute permits the recovery of attorney's fees on certain conditions, the conditions must, of course, be met,⁴⁷ and strict compliance and construction have been required, the statute being penal in its nature.⁴⁸

Recovery has been allowed for loss of rental by reason of delay in the completion of the building,⁴⁹ but not for losses and expenses incident to the purchase and resale of land.⁵⁰ A surety has been held not liable for materials furnished at the request of the owner after the contractor had absconded.⁵¹

The surety is entitled to have the building fund in the hands of the owner properly applied as contemplated by the contract and bond and in accordance with the law,⁵² and it has been held that he is entitled to have the value of extra work offset against the owner's claim.⁵³ Money which a contractor collected under a contract secured by a bond and paid to one who furnished him materials under that job and others should be credited on the bond, relieving the surety to that extent,⁵⁴ and it has been held that payment by a contractor for materials furnished on a contract secured by a bond should be credited on the bond, whether or not the contractor received the money under that contract.⁵⁵ Where a contract does not show the amount, character, or price of the material to be furnished, and would ordinarily be insufficiently detailed to comply with the statute, the materialman may nevertheless recover thereon where the surety agreed to pay all recorded liens.⁵⁶ tractor will perform his contract and promising materialmen to pay them for materials furnished, the owner's and materialmen's rights of action are separate and distinct.

Where a bond contains a promise to the owner that the contractor will perform his contract and a promise to materialmen to pay them for materials furnished the general contractor, the respective rights of action of the owner and the materialmen are separate, distinct, and independent.⁵⁷ An owner who has paid money to discharge liens may recover from the contractor and the surety on the bond⁵⁸ although such right may not accrue until after satisfaction of the liens by payment.⁵⁹ He may proceed against the surety without first exhausting his remedy against the contractor.⁶⁰ A second mortgagee may sue for breach of the condition of a bond by the establishment of valid mechanics' liens against the property, without redeeming from the foreclosure of the first mortgagee.⁶¹ Bondholders of a bankrupt corporation are not entitled to maintain an action against the surety on a contractor's bond as direct beneficiaries, where the bond runs to the corporation as obligee.⁶²

The surety has no cause of action against the owner by reason of the latter's violation of the contract of suretyship⁶³ or of the building contract,⁶⁴ the payment by the surety of the debts owing by the contractor to the materialmen,⁶⁵ or the rendition of a judgment against the surety for claims of subcontractors, laborers, or materialmen.⁶⁶

surety on a bond naming the trustees of mortgages as the sole obligees, there being no privity of contract,⁶⁷ and under the language of particular instruments involved the contractor has likewise been held not entitled to recover in equity on the theory that such bond was a guaranty running to him.⁶⁸ However, an indemnity bond may be such as to constitute a contract for the benefit of a third person so as to authorize an action against the surety by the contractor.⁶⁹

An accounting as between the owner and the contractor's surety may be allowed in a proper case.⁷⁰

Arbitration A provision of a contract with respect to arbitration of disputes does not apply, so as to prevent suit on a bond, where the subject matter of the suit is covered by a separate agreement made after the original one.⁷¹

(2) Suits by Subcontractors, Laborers, or Materialmen

(a) In general

(b) As affected by status of particular claim or claimant

(a) In General

Whether subcontractors, laborers, or materialmen may sue on a contractor's bond depends, apart from statute, on the intention of the parties to the bond as evidenced by the language thereof.

Under the provisions of some statutes as to bonds given thereunder, persons performing labor or furnishing materials have a right to recover thereon.⁷²

General policy of promoting building industry and its orderly conduct by putting bond behind obligations held that, where the contract and bond are plain and unambiguous, they should be construed by their provisions alone, and the intent and legal effect thereof not arrived at by a consideration of extraneous evidence.⁷⁸ Doubt existing between the parties to a contractor's bond as to whether it covered the claims of laborers or materialmen may be resolved by the subsequent construction placed on it by the parties.⁷⁹ However, a surety on a contractor's bond is not estopped to deny its liability to materialmen by a letter to the latter requesting statements of their claims to facilitate payment to them by the contractor,⁸⁰ nor does the surety's action in undertaking to distribute the contractor's funds to materialmen constitute a construction of the bond by the surety as binding it to pay materialmen.⁸¹ It has been said that if the terms of the bond admit of two interpretations the one which furnishes the greater indemnity should be adopted.⁸²

The right of such parties to sue on the bond is affirmed not only in cases where the bond expressly provides that they may do so⁸³ or declares that it is for their use or benefit,⁸⁴ but also in cases where it appears by fair and reasonable intendment that their rights and interests were contemplated and provided for,⁸⁵ as where protection to the owner is of contractor may be considered in ascertaining intent of contractor's bond—Fidelity & Deposit Co of Baltimore, Md., v Rainer, 125 So 55, 220 Ala 262, followed in Parker v Fidelity & Deposit Co of Maryland, 125 So 60, 220 Ala 267

Liberal construction for claimants

The weight of authority⁸⁶ is to the effect that a contractor's bond should be liberally construed in favor of laborers and materialmen for whose benefit a bond is ostensibly executed, as against a paid surety company—Hospital for Women of Maryland for Use of Robert S Green, Inc v U S Fidelity & Guaranty Co, 11 A 2d 467, 177 Md 615, 128 ALR 931

Subcontractors, laborers, and materialmen are frequently held to have a right to sue on the bond where a promise, covenant, provision, or condition of the bond, or of the contract to which it refers, either by its express terms, or by the construction placed thereon, is deemed to secure the payment of claims for labor performed or materials furnished by them, or to obligate the contractor to pay for labor and materials,⁸⁷ unless the surety's contract in terms disclaims liability to such per-benefit in order to authorize suit by or for use of materialman—Fidelity & Deposit Co of Baltimore, Md., v Rainer, 125 So 55, 230 Ala 262, followed in Parker v Fidelity & Deposit Co of Maryland, 125 So 60, 230 Ala 267 sons,⁸⁸ and it has been held that this principle applies whether or not the bond is required by statute.⁸⁹ The rule also applies to private as well as to public bonds,⁹⁰ and even though the surety was a gratuitous, as distinguished from a paid, one.⁹¹ The fact that a materialman or laborer was not aware of the existence of the bond until after the materials were delivered or the labor performed does not prevent him from taking advantage of it,⁹² nor is it necessary that subcontractors, materialmen, or laborers be named⁹³ or even known⁹⁴ when the obligation is made, or, it has been held, that there be privity between them and the obligor⁹⁵ or obligee⁹⁶ on the bond. On the other hand, it has been held that as to private bonds there must always be privity between the materialman and the

In some cases subcontractors, laborers, and materialmen are denied a right to recover on the bond,⁹⁸ as where the bond, either alone or taken in connection with the contract, is construed to be for the benefit of the owner only,⁹⁹ where a bond which names only the owner as obligee explicitly provides that no right of action shall accrue thereon, to, or for the use or benefit of, any person other than the obligee named,¹ provided such a limitation is not prohibited by statute and is not regarded as contrary to public policy,² where the bond contains no promise or stipulation for the payment of the claims of subcontractors, laborers, and materialmen,³ but is conditioned merely that the contractor shall perform his contract with the owner,⁴ notwithstanding provision of bond that no right of action should accrue thereon for use of any one other than specified obligees, where claimants did not participate in bond—Haynes Hardware Co v Western Casualty & Surety Co, 133 P 2d 574, 156 Kan 356

or protect the owner,⁵ or mortgage bondholders,⁶ or a trustee for such bondholders,⁷ against liens, and, in some instances, even where the bond contains a provision for the payment of claims for labor and material,⁸ the view being taken that such a provision, or defeasance clause, standing alone, is insufficient to confer the right to sue on materialmen or laborers, although a different result may follow if it is aided by additional language.⁹

Before subcontractors, laborers, and materialmen can recover from the surety for the contractor's default in his obligation to them, they must show compliance with the required conditions,¹⁰ but a materialman, in order to recover on the bond, is not required to show that all the material sold and delivered by him to the contractor was actually used.¹¹ A materialman seeking to take advantage of the bond takes it subject to all legal defenses and inherent equities arising out of the contract between the contractor and the surety.¹² A materialman may waive his rights against the surety.¹³

Set-off In an action on a subcontractor's bond to the main contractor, brought in the name of the main contractor's trustee in bankruptcy for the use of the contractor's materialman, the main contractor's indebtedness to the subcontractor has been held not allowable as a set-off against the materialman's claim for materials furnished the subcontractor.¹⁴

What law governs Where the law of the state in which the bond is made gives a materialman the right to sue the surety directly, he is entitled to do so in the state of the forum,¹⁵ but the manner of enforcement is governed by the law of the forum.¹⁶

(b) As Affected by Status of Particular Claim or Claimant

Under some bonds or statutes a laborer, materialman, or subcontractor may sue on the contractor's bond even though he has not perfected his lien.

A laborer, materialman, or subcontractor may have a right to sue on the contractor's bond even though he also has the right to enforce a lien,¹⁷ and under the terms of some,¹⁸ although not other,¹⁹ bonds he must have a right to a lien in order to be entitled to sue on the bond. On the other hand, while there is some authority to the contrary,²⁰ it has generally been held not necessary for contractor,²⁸ and it has been held, under a statute subsequently held unconstitutional, that suit may not be brought by one who has furnished merely tools and machinery²⁹

b. Form of Action

An action on a contractor's bond is based thereon, not on the building contract

An action on a contractor's bond is based thereon rather than on the building contract³⁰ Under the express terms of at least one statute, a recovery on a bond given thereunder may be had either in a suit brought to foreclose liens or in a separate suit on the bond³¹ It has been held that a court of equity, having determined that a claim of lien is unfounded, will not retain jurisdiction to determine whether there is liability on the bond, the latter being a legal question³²

c. Time to Sue

Suit on a contractor's bond must be brought within the period of limitation prescribed by statute³³ or the bond itself,³⁴ if such provision of the bond is reasonable,³⁵ and, where suit is not brought within the time specified, the defense of limitations may be asserted by the surety,³⁶ provided, in the case of a contractual limitation, it has not been waived³⁷ While it has been held that a nonstatutory bond is governed by the limitation provision in the bond and not by the statutory period,³⁸ it has also been held that a suit brought within the statutory period is not barred because not brought within the shorter period provided for by the bond³⁹

Reason for rule

Any provision in a contract made and to be performed in a particular state, to abridge the period prescribed by the statute of limitations of that state for the bringing of suit, is against public policy and void—Aetna Casualty & Surety Co v U. S Gypsum Co, supra.

In particular circumstances the defense of laches has been held not available ⁴⁰

d. Parties

General principles governing parties to civil actions have been applied in actions on contractor's bonds

In an action by the owner on a contractor's indemnity bond, lien claimants are not necessary parties,⁴¹ and it has been held that the obligee may sue on the bond without joining the person or persons, such as materialmen and subcontractors, for whose benefit the bond was executed.⁴² Also a materialman may sue on such a bond without joining the obligee as a party.⁴³ Where a bond is intended for the benefit of laborers and materialmen, the obligee is not barred from becoming a coplaintiff with laborers or materialmen, in a suit against the surety, by a provision of the bond that no action shall accrue thereon to the use or benefit of anyone other than the obligee named therein.⁴⁴ In some cases an obligee has been held to have sufficient interest to maintain an action against the surety to collect laborers' and materialmen's claims for their use,⁴⁵ and a main contractor's trustee in bankruptcy may maintain an action on a subcontractor's bond to the main contractor, as the nominal plaintiff suing for the use of the subcontractor's materialmen, although such trustee has no right of action on the bond.⁴⁶ The question whether an action on a contractor's bond should be brought in the name of the obligee named in the bond or the real party in interest is controlled by the lex fori, since it pertains to the form of the remedy and does not go to the substance of the action.⁴⁷

Under a statute making the contractor and his surety liable in solido for all labor and material used in the work, a materialman may sue the surety without joining the contractor as a party,⁴⁸ and apart from such statute the same holding has been made where the contractor's bond is joint and several.⁴⁹

A contractor's assignee of a mechanic's lien note has been held not entitled to sue on a bond protecting the owner against the contractor's default, to recover the amount it was adjudged to pay because of the contractor's default, on the owner's election not to pursue his right on the bond, since there were no contractual relations between the surety and such assignee.⁵⁰ A holder of mortgage notes has been held entitled to sue in his own name on a lien indemnity bond executed by the mortgagor as owner to the mortgagee as obligee and also in favor of any holders of mortgage notes, although the named obligee bought in the liens at a discount in the mortgage foreclosure proceedings.⁵¹

Intervention, based on a materialman's claim, in a suit by the building owner against the contractor and surety must be filed within the statutory period.⁵² A party making a claim which is not covered by the bond will not be permitted to intervene in such a suit.⁵³

e. Defenses

Facts and circumstances not establishing the surety's freedom from liability have been held not available as defenses in actions on contractor's bonds

Among various other alleged defenses,⁵⁴ it has been held that a surety who defended an action to enforce a mechanic's lien cannot, in a suit on the bond, assert a defense which he could have asserted, but did not assert, in the foreclosure action,⁵⁵ and a surety cannot, in a suit against it for reimbursement for the payment of a lien, assert as defenses matters occurring long after the judicial determination of its liability.⁵⁶ The pendency of an action by the lienors to recover personally against sureties for materials is no defense to an action by the owner to recover for the liens imposed on the property.⁵⁷ The facts that the owner and the contractor are acting as principal and agent⁵⁸ and that the owner did not pay the contractor in full⁵⁹ are immaterial with respect to the surety's liability to lien claimants.

A surety guaranteeing faithful performance of a building contract cannot defend on the ground that the contractor engaged to construct the building at too low a price or that the building was worth more to the owner than the agreed price,⁶⁰ likewise, where a contractor agrees to erect a building for a specified price, his surety, in a suit on the bond for the excess cost of building, is in no position to question the manner in which the excess was paid, or caused to be paid, by the owner.⁶¹ The fact that the owner can credit on his note, payable to the contractor, the amount of the loss occasioned by the contractor's default does not relieve the contractor's surety of liability for such loss,⁶² and the fact that the owner has a surety bond to protect him against loss does not change the legal relations between him and the materialman, who had served a notice of lien on him, with respect to whether the contractor's surety is liable on the contractor's bond to indemnify the owner for the materialman's claim.⁶³

Under at least one statute the surety on a bond given thereunder is limited to such defenses as the principal on the bond can make,⁶⁴ but this is a provision which any party for whose interest it is made may dispense with,⁶⁵ and a materialman dis-

penses with it by guaranteeing that no lien will be recorded for his claim⁶⁶ Where the owner seeks to recover the amount of a judgment establishing a mechanic's lien for material furnished to the contractors, it is no defense that plaintiff had refused to pay the contractors two small items for a balance due and for extras, where due credits were received therefor by the contractors and inured to the benefit of the surety on the bond, having been deducted from the amount of plaintiff's claim⁶⁷

f. Pleadings

The petition in an action on a contractor's bond must state a cause of action. It need not negative matters of defense.

The petition or complaint in an action on a contractor's bond must state a cause of action⁶⁹ so as to be sufficient on demurrer⁷⁰ It must allege the amount of the bond⁷¹ and must show such a breach of the bond as fixes the liability thereon,⁷² but need not negative matters of defense⁷³ or set forth matters not affecting liability on the bond.⁷⁴

In an action by one lienholder the declaration should aver the interest of other lienholders⁷⁵ If the surety contract, pleaded in hac verba, evidences an intent to benefit a third party beneficiary, no further allegation of such intent is necessary.⁷⁶ In an action by a subcontractor the complaint need not set out in detail the contract between the owner and the contractor,⁷⁷ and, if it states a direct and primary cause of action in favor of the subcontractor, other allegations attempting to set up a cause of action by assignment of the bond from the owner may, if insufficient, be ignored⁷⁸ and do not invalidate the complaint.⁷⁹

An answer or affidavit of defense which admits, or does not deny, defendant's liability and plaintiff's right to recover is insufficient⁸⁰ A want of consideration for the bond,⁸¹ or a defense in the nature of an estoppel,⁸² such as false representations inducing the signing of the bond,⁸³ must be specially pleaded to be available as a defense; and a general denial to an answer affirmatively alleging the execution of the bond and the default of the principal contractor is insufficient to raise the issue of fraud in the procurement of the bond⁸⁴ Where the breach alleged is the neglect to pay off certain mechanics' liens, an answer alleging that defendants were unable to pay the mechanics because plaintiffs failed to lend them money as agreed, without showing the terms of the agreed loan or the damage sustained by defendants from losing it, is bad,⁸⁵ and a plea alleging that a materialman, although knowing that money received from the contractor was paid by the owner, applied it to the payment of other indebtedness is fatally defective if it fails to show any duty on the materialman to do with the money otherwise than he did⁸⁶

The allegations and the proof must correspond in an action on a contractor's bond⁸⁷ In an action by the owner the amount of claims for material may be proved, even though claimants, made parties defendant, have not appeared by answer⁸⁸ One furnishing materials for the construction of two buildings, each covered by a bond of the same surety, must, in a suit against the surety, establish what portion of the materials went into each building, where each bond makes the surety liable only for the materials furnished for the building covered by that bond⁸⁹ Evidence is admissible to prove or disprove material facts which have been put in issue by being alleged in the pleading of one party and denied in the pleading of the adverse party⁹⁰ A denial by the surety of all liability under the bond waives the necessity of proof of any notice of default which may be required by the bond as a condition precedent to the maintenance of an action thereon⁹¹

In equity, the court may adapt its decree to the circumstances of the case⁴ and offset one claim against another where they grow out of the same transaction⁵

In a subcontractor's action against the surety, the judgment should be for the amount of the penalty of the bond, and not for the amount of damages assessed⁶ In an action against an owner and the surety, where unpaid subcontractors and materialmen are awarded liens against the property, the owner is entitled to judgment over against the surety if the judgment liens are satisfied out of the property,⁷ and, in an owner's action against a contractor and his sureties, where the court awarded the sureties a judgment against the contractor for materials furnished for the building, a provision giving them a judgment against the contractor on satisfying the awards made in the judgment in favor of the lien claimants and the owner should have been embodied in the judgment⁸ In a contractor's action against a subcontractor for materials, a money judgment against the contractor on a cross complaint on the bond has been held not prejudicial to the contractor in view of a concurrent court order requiring the retention in the registry of the court of sums collected on the judgment, to protect materialmen simultaneously suing the contractor⁹

A judgment against the warrantor in a bond, should not be executed until the owner pays into the hands of the warrantor, or deposits in the registry of the court, the balance due on the contract price, to be applied on the claims of the privilege creditors¹⁰ Where the surety has defended an action brought to enforce a mechanic's lien without questioning the identity of the land, it is too late after verdict in an action on the bond to raise on motion for a new trial the defense that the evidence fails to show that the land on which the lien was filed is the same as that on which the building mentioned in the bond was built.¹¹

VIII. ENFORCEMENT

§ 263. In General

- a Nature and form of remedy
- b Personal liability

a. Nature and Form of Remedy

The method of enforcing a mechanic's lien is governed by the statute creating the lien.

Since the right to a mechanic's lien is entirely statutory, not only the right itself, but the method of enforcing it, must depend on the statute,¹² and in determining the right to a mechanic's lien and the enforcement thereof, according to the decisions on the question, the requirements of the statute must

Under the requirements of the particular statute, a proceeding to foreclose a mechanic's lien may be by suit leading to a decree as in other suits of foreclosure,¹⁶ or by attachment followed by judgment and execution for the amount secured, as discussed infra § 287, or by an attachment either at law or in equity or by judgment and execution at law to be levied on the property on which the lien rests.¹⁷ A statute providing for a deficiency judgment of like effect as in an action for the foreclosure of mortgages where, on a sale of the property subject to the lien, there is a deficiency of proceeds to pay plaintiff's claim has been held not to require the entire procedure to be the same as in proceedings to foreclose real estate mortgages,¹⁸ and, on the other hand, such a provision has been held to render the suit like a suit for the foreclosure of a mortgage and to make the procedure conformable thereto.¹⁹ A mechanic's lien may, it has been held, be foreostensibly brought to foreclose lien, is action to test validity of lien had it not been discharged, and, if found valid, to procure judgment on undertaking, rather than judgment of foreclosure against realty.—Whits Plains Sash & Door Co v Doyle, 186 N E 33, 263 N Y 16

closed by a complaint in intervention in an action by the contractor against the owner²⁰

Action or special proceeding Under the statutes in some jurisdictions the proceedings to enforce a mechanic's lien are not by action but by a special proceeding,²¹ but where the statute does not assume to prescribe any special rules of practice or procedure but leaves such matters to be regulated by the general rules governing other actions of a similar nature, the proceeding has been held to be an ordinary civil action and not a special proceeding.²² Under some statutes a mechanic's lien proceeding is a statutory summary proceeding.²³

Assumpsit In some jurisdictions a mechanic's lien suit is regarded as an action in the nature of an action of assumpsit for the price and value of work, labor, and materials furnished by claimant,²⁴ and it is not to be regarded as an action on the written contract precluding a recovery on a quantum meruit.²⁵ Under a statute providing that a subcontractor may either file his petition and enforce his lien or sue the owner and contractor for the amount due him, in which action a personal judgment may be rendered, the only action at law which may be brought against the owner under the Lien Act is assumpsit on a contract implied by law.²⁶ Under some statutes the general procedure under the statute corresponds with the general practice in actions of assumpsit.²⁷

statutory provisions except in so far as particular statutory rules have been adopted,²⁸ it being expressly so provided by statute in some jurisdictions.²⁹

Operation of statutes and what law governs. It has been held that the procedure to enforce a mechanic's lien is governed by the statute in force when the contract is made rather than that in force when the action is brought,³⁰ and that a statute prescribing the procedure to enforce the mechanic's lien does not apply to proceedings instituted before it becomes effective,³¹ but it has also been held that, where the law as to enforcement of mechanic's liens is changed before the lien has accrued, the later law applies.³² It has been held that the remedy of a materialman on a surety bond given in another state is governed by the law of the forum.³³

As a general rule statutes providing for mechanics' liens do not impose any personal liability that would not otherwise exist.

Statutes providing for mechanics' liens do not as a general rule create any personal liability on the part of the owner of the property which has been improved, or on the part of anyone else who would not, independent of the statute, be personally liable to claimant.³⁴ A mechanic's lien does not of itself create a personal liability on the part of the owner of the property,³⁵ it operates only in rem against the property, and not in personam.³⁶ However, personal liability is sometimes imposed on the owner by statute where he fails to take the statutory steps directed for the protection of subcontractors and materialmen,³⁷ and personal liability is imposed under some statutes on one who contracts for an improvement on land which he does not own³⁸

As a general rule one who is not party or privy to the contract for the improvement, work, or materials is not personally liable therefor³⁹ Thus an owner is not liable for work or materials furnished a contractor where he is not party or privy to the contract between the contractor and subcontractor or materialman,⁴⁰ nor is he liable for work done at the request of a tenant⁴¹ although the lease provides that the improvement shall become the owner's property,⁴² nor is one coowner personally liable for work contracted for by another coowner.⁴³ The consent of the owner to the making of the improvement does not of itself impose on him any personal liability,⁴⁴ and even consent and benefit do not in themselves import contractual liability⁴⁵ Similarly a contractor ordinarily is not liable to one furnishing labor or material to a subcontractor under a contract to which he is not party or privy⁴⁶

One who validly obligates himself to pay for the improvement, work, or materials is personally liable therefor⁴⁷ Under such circumstances the owner may be personally liable to a subcontractor or materialman,⁴⁸ and he is personally liable to those with

It has been held that, if labor is performed or material furnished directly to and on the credit of the owner, he is personally liable therefor,⁵¹ but such liability does not exist where the labor or material is furnished to the contractor⁵² or if the owner had no knowledge that the improvement was being undertaken⁵³

equitable nature,⁵⁷ and this notwithstanding damages are sought by an answer or cross complaint,⁵⁸ or defendant interposes a legal defense,⁵⁹ or although no particular court is designated in the statute.⁶⁰ Where the statute expressly provides for the enforcement of a particular lien by a bill in equity, that remedy is exclusive.⁶¹ Under some statutes, however, the right has been given to proceed either at law or in equity,⁶² or equity has been given concurrent jurisdiction,⁶³ and in such case equity jurisdiction does not depend on the existence of some special ground of equitable cognizance,⁶⁴ nor is it defeated by the existence of an adequate remedy at law.⁶⁵

Under other statutes the remedy for the enforcement of a mechanic's lien has been prescribed to be by an ordinary action at law or a proceeding in a court of law,⁶⁶ not governed by equitable principles,⁶⁷ and the procedure is that prevailing at law.⁶⁸ Such a remedy has been held to be exclusive of the jurisdiction of a court of equity in the absence of special circumstances demanding equitable interference,⁶⁹ but a bill will lie when such peculiar circumstances exist as to render the interposition of a court of equity proper.⁷⁰

for the debt and enforcement of the lien may be procured,⁷⁷ but in such case the proceeding has been held to combine the characteristics of an action in personam with those of an action in rem⁷⁸

Under some statutes a mechanic's lien suit is inter partes and not in rem⁷⁹ and cannot be established except as an incident to a personal judgment⁸⁰ Where under the statute the lien attaches, is filed, and is enforced for the security and payment of the judgment obtained on the debt, the action is not to be regarded as a proceeding quasi in rem,⁸¹ and jurisdiction of the person must be acquired as in the case of other judgments in personam⁸²

A statute which gives a lien on property of a wife to one who acts in pursuance of a contract with her husband does not authorize a personal action against her where it does not attempt to charge her personally.⁸³

§ 266. Exclusive, Cumulative, and Concurrent Remedies

A mechanic's lien is a cumulative remedy, and the lienor may resort to the ordinary common-law remedies to enforce his contract.

The lien given by the statute to mechanics and materialmen is but a cumulative remedy to enforce their respective contracts, and independently of the lien such parties may resort to the ordinary common-law remedies to enforce their contracts, as by action to recover personal judgment⁸⁴ The two remedies may be pursued simultaneously, although there can be but one satisfaction⁸⁵ So a subcontractor may prosecute a petition for a mechanic's lien simultaneously with an action at law against the contractor,⁸⁶ and where by the statute a subcontractor or materialman may acquire a lien on the property to the extent of the value of the materials furnished, or may hold the owner of the building personally liable, not exceeding the amount that may be due or may become due from him to the contractor, they may do one or the other, or both⁸⁷ Where the statute provides a lien in favor of a subcontractor and also gives him the right to sue the contractor and owner jointly for the amount due from the contractor, the subcontractor, unless the statute provides to the contrary, may pursue either of these remedies or may resort to his common-law action against the contractor alone.⁸⁸ Where there is no provision in the statute to the contrary, each lienor may institute or prosecute a separate action for the enforcement of his lien⁸⁹

scribed by the statute for the enforcement of the lien itself has been held to be exclusive⁹⁰

§ 267. Removal of Improvements from Premises

The removal of the improvement from the land, under some circumstances, may be the remedy for enforcing a lien on an improvement.

Sometimes, as discussed supra § 188, under particular conditions prescribed by the statute the lien attaches only to the improvement, and the removal of such improvement, if it can be done without material injury to the property as it stood prior to the improvement, is the remedy prescribed for enforcing such lien⁹¹ Other statutes give a right of removal in certain instances where improvements are made in ignorance of the rights of the owner of a superior title⁹² One who has a lien on the fixtures or other equipment installed in a building may under some statutes enforce his lien and have such property sold separately where it may be removed without injury to the realty⁹³

§ 268. Conditions Precedent

There must be a compliance with conditions imposed by the statute and the contract before an action to enforce a mechanic's lien will lie

There can be no foreclosure of the lien until the debt for which the lien is made and held as security has become payable,⁹⁴ and the lienor must have created and perfected his lien in the manner the statute provides before he can successfully bring an action to enforce it⁹⁵ Other conditions cannot be imposed on the right to proceed for the enforcement of the lien unless they arise out of the statute or are incorporated in the contract of the parties,⁹⁶ but where the contract itself annexes conditions,⁹⁷ or where the statute annexes conditions,⁹⁸ such contract or statutory requirements and conditions must be met and performed or the remedy will not be available

The filing of a notice of intention to sue as required by statute may be an essential,⁹⁹ although it has been held that the failure of claimant to serve a statutory notice of intention to enforce a mechanic's lien is not fatal where the owner appears and defends and there is no showing of any prejudice resulting from the failure to give the notice¹ So compliance with a requirement of the statute that the contractor furnish a statement to the owner of persons having claims has been held essential² It has been held that, where a note has been given for the amount due without extinguishing the lien, it must be surrendered to the maker or accounted for by showing that it is not in any event enforceable against him as a condition to a final judgment on the lien.³

Release of liens A provision for the release of liens of subcontractors, etc., before the last installment of the contract price shall be paid, has been held not to prevent an effective commencement of the proceedings by the contractor to enforce his lien, although there may be unreleased liens on the record, but he will not be permitted to enforce his claim to the exclusion of such other liens without showing that they have been released.⁴

Demand. Unless required by statute a demand is not necessary before instituting proceedings to enforce the lien,⁵ particularly where the answer shows that it would have been unavailable⁶ or where the owner has prevented performance by a breach of his contract.⁷ The statute may, however, require a demand for payment as a condition precedent.⁸ Where the statute provides that the lien may be enforced after demand and refusal of the amount due or upon neglect to pay on demand, the demand must be made after the lien attaches and before the filing of the suit.⁹ Under some statutes providing a summary remedy by way of execution issued on an affidavit, a demand and refusal to pay before the issuance of the execution is a condition precedent.¹⁰

tion, unless agreed on by the parties, a lien cannot be foreclosed where the amount is not settled in either way,¹¹ and this is also true where the statute conferring the lien requires an account, if disputed, to be first settled by arbitration.¹² However, where no request for an arbitration has been made, an arbitration is not a condition precedent to an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien, although a contract provides for the arbitration of questions in dispute but does not provide that arbitration shall precede an action upon the contract.¹³ Arbitration of a claim for extras as contemplated by the contract is not essential to the institution of a suit to enforce a mechanic's lien where the contractor had a right to such a lien for a balance due on the original contract price,¹⁴ nor is such arbitration necessary where the certificate of the architect as to the amount to be allowed for extras is refused not because of the disagreement as to valuation, but because of the order of the owner of the property.¹⁵

Certificates of architects, engineers, or others Where, under the terms of the contract, the certificate of an architect or other stipulated person is a condition precedent to the right to payment, a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien cannot be maintained until such certificate is had,¹⁶ or a valid excuse for failure to obtain it is established,¹⁷ or a waiver is shown.¹⁸ Where the owner has prevented performance by a breach of his contract, the production of a certificate of the architect prior to the institution of an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien is obviated,¹⁹ and where a subcontract-

tor's lien under the statute is not dependent on whether anything is due the principal contractor, the production of an architect's certificate of satisfactory performance as required by the contract with the principal contractor is not a prerequisite to the subcontractor's right to enforce his lien²⁰

§ 269. — Suit by Subcontractor

Under some statutes a subcontractor is required to establish his claim by a judgment against the contractor before he can enforce his lien against the owner's property.

The statutory conditions must exist to entitle the subcontractor to sue the owner²¹ Under some statutes the debt must be judicially ascertained by a judgment in favor of the subcontractor against the contractor before the former can enforce the lien against the owner's property,²² or the contractor must be joined in the action and also sued,²³ but under other statutes this is not required.²⁴ In any event, it is not necessary where the owner is personally liable for the debt²⁵ or where the suit is instituted by the owner²⁶ Under a statute providing that under certain conditions an action at law may be maintained against the owner by a subcontractor on a notice served according to the provisions of the statute to recover the amount claimed in the notice and due to the person who serves such notice from the contractor, the mere disallowance by the contractor of the claim of a subcontractor will not prevent such a suit²⁷ Where the filing of a

The function of a suit to foreclose a materialman's lien is not to establish for the first time when and what materials were furnished for a particular job, and it is not a suit in personam when the contractor is not a party, but the purpose is merely to establish absolutely a special lien against the property involved—Chambers Lumber Co v Gilmer, 5 S E 2d 84, 60 Ga App 832

Purchase by agent, not contractor

Where materialman claimed lien as against wife as owner of premises improved and as one to whom materials were furnished, general judgment against husband, who allegedly purchased materials as wife's agent rather than as her contractor, was not prerequisite to filing of petition against wife to foreclose materialman's lien—Gibbs v Carolina Portland Cement Co, 177 S E 760, 50 Ga App 239

§ 270. Compelling Enforcement

Under some statutes the owner may compel lien claimants to institute proceedings for the enforcement of their claims.

By statute provisions are frequently made under which the owner or person in interest designated by the statute may compel claimant of a lien to proceed to enforce it within a specified time after the making of a statutory demand.²⁹ Under such a statute it is necessary that the demand be by a person falling within the class named,³⁰ and the lien proceeding must be begun as required by the statute,³¹ or claimant must show sufficient cause for not having done so.³² A lien claimant cannot escape his obligation to have summons issued for enforcing the lien within the statutory time after demand by filing a second claim.³³ Under other statutes provision is made for a petition on which claimant is required to proceed as on scire facias regularly issued.³⁴

Bill for general settlement Provision is made in some statutes for a proceeding by which several individual claimants of liens may be compelled by the owner to adjudicate their claims in a single action.³⁵ The original contractor is a necessary party defendant to such a proceeding,³⁶ but he need not be formally named as a party defendant in the owner's petition where he is made a party by the court on motion of defendant lien claimant.³⁷ In such a proceeding, if the assent of the court is necessary to join a new party defendant, it is sufficiently indicated by the fact that the court tries the issues and enters its decree after the party so brought in has filed an answer and plea to the petition and cross bill.³⁸ Where the statute provides that, where there are several defendants, a copy of the petition is necessary for the first one served and as to the others a copy of the writ is sufficient, a copy of the petition need not be served on a subsequent defendant where the first defendant appears and is not complaining as to the way in which he is served.³⁹ The fact that at the time of the trial only a single lien claimant remains does not deprive the court of the power to adjudicate his rights after the others have been satisfied and dismissed.⁴⁰

§ 271. Restraining or Staying Enforcement

Under general equity principles the enforcement of a mechanic's lien may be enjoined or stayed.

Under the general rules controlling the issuance of an injunction against an action or other legal proceeding, discussed in Injunctions § 36 et seq, an injunction may be had against the enforcement of a mechanic's lien,⁴¹ as where the proceeding is instituted after the satisfaction of a judgment obtained by claimant against the sureties on a bond given to discharge liens,⁴² but equity will not interfere to prevent the setting up and establishment of the lien in the proceedings at law where the objection raised affords a full and complete defense in that action.⁴³ In a proper case injunctive relief may be had against the prosecution of separate lien proceedings,⁴⁴ as where they may prevent the owner from availing himself of a defense by way of

Stay of proceedings. Under some circumstances the court in which the mechanic's lien proceeding is pending may stay the proceeding or execution if such a course should become necessary by reason of other proceedings of the same character by other claimants against the same defendant, but only when it appears necessary to a proper administration of justice will this be done⁴⁷ Thus, where the contractor has recovered judgment against the owner and is attempting to enforce it in fraud of the rights of the workmen or materialmen, the court may enjoin its collection, take possession of the funds, and adjust the rights and equities of claimants⁴⁸

Injunction against sale A sale on foreclosure of a mechanic's lien may be enjoined where based on a decree void for want of jurisdiction,⁴⁹ or where there has been a timely tender by the owner of the amount due,⁵⁰ or because of a retention of collateral by the lienor⁵¹ or a misappropriation thereof⁵² No injunction will be granted to restrain a sale on grounds which, if available at all, should have been set up in the foreclosure proceeding⁵³ or where there is an adequate remedy at law⁵⁴ However, the owner may resort to this remedy to prevent a sale of improvements attached to the soil under a contract with a lessee by which the owner was not bound and under proceedings to which he was not a party so that he was not concluded on the question of the character of the improvements,⁵⁵ and the court will restrain a sale under a foreclosure proceeding in order to prevent a cloud on complainant's title⁵⁶

Other lienors who are entitled to have their claims adjusted and their rights protected in the chancery proceedings brought to foreclose a mechanic's lien, but who are not made parties thereto, may, by a petition, have the rights and liens of all parties interested adjusted and enforced and to that end a sale under the original proceedings enjoined,⁵⁷ and so, where one who has an interest in the property is not bound by the proceedings because he is not joined as a party therein, he may bring his suit to restrain a sale for reasons which would have defeated the foreclosure proceedings if he had been a party⁵⁸

Insurance proceeds A lienor suing to foreclose a lien on property destroyed by fire may be entitled to enjoin the payment of the insurance to an insolvent owner⁵⁹

§ 272. Joinder and Splitting of Liens

Mechanic's lien statutes frequently provide for the determination of all lien claims against the property in a single suit.

The mechanics' lien laws frequently evidence an intention that there shall not be separate suits brought by each contractor or subcontractor to enforce liens but that they shall all be determined in one suit,⁶⁰ as where it is provided that all persons

Equity proceeding as bar to separate suit

(1) Under the mechanics' lien statute the mere institution of an equitable suit to establish and enforce mechanics' lien, that is, the filing of petition with intention that summons shall issue in regular course, precludes the bringing of a separate suit—Imse-Schilling Sash & Door Co v Kellems, 179 SW 2d 910, 237 Mo App 960—Richards Brick Co v

in interest may be made defendants, including those persons entitled to liens whose claims are not due at the time the suit is instituted,⁶¹ or that notice shall be given to all lien claimants,⁶² or that all other lienholders shall be made defendants,⁶³ or that any number of lienholders may join in one suit⁶⁴

In the absence of a statutory provision to the contrary, separate actions may be brought to enforce each lien,⁶⁵ and it has been held that claimants whose interests are several cannot join as plaintiffs in the same action,⁶⁶ but, even where the impropriety of such joinder is recognized, if the claims are stated separately and the findings and judgment are several as to each plaintiff, the error in overruling a demurrer to the complaint is harmless⁶⁷ A mechanic, however, has no power to split up one entire demand and maintain several suits and enforce several liens therefor⁶⁸ Where under a single contract material is furnished for several houses erected on distinct lots, the owner cannot object that claimant seeks to enforce liens on all of the houses in a single proceeding,⁶⁹ and it has been held proper to enforce in one action liens under separate contracts for separate buildings on the same plot,⁷⁰ but a proceeding to enforce mechanic's liens on a number of improvements erected under dis-

Dealings with different contracts relative to same buildings A single lien may be enforced in one action for an amount due under two separate contracts under which the work and material were furnished, the same property being improved under both agreements and the rights growing out of them being identical in character and as to parties⁷² A single lien may be enforced for all materials furnished in the same building, although there are different contractors therefor.⁷³ A materialman's lien may be enforced in a single proceeding for material furnished to contractors and to subcontractors for use in the same building,⁷⁴ although the contrary has also been held,⁷⁵ and it has been held that a subcontractor cannot join in one claim work done under a contract with the contractor and work done under a contract with the owner⁷⁶

Under contracts with several owners. A claim for services performed on one man's property cannot be charged against the property of another person,⁷⁷ and on this principle it has been held that a joint lien cannot be enforced against the property of several owners for material or labor put into improvements on the several lots of land, but that

(2) The words "separate suit" as used in statute providing that after institution of equitable action on mechanics' lien claim no separate suit shall be brought on any mechanics' lien are not limited in their meaning to a suit at law, but include as well a suit in equity—Imse-Schilling Sash & Door Co v Kellems, supra—Badger Lumber & Coal Co v Robertson, 297 S W 99, 223 Mo App 211

(3) To warrant dismissal of mechanic's lien suit because of pending equitable mechanic's lien suit, it should appear that pending suit was an equitable mechanic's lien suit within statutes governing such proceeding, that it involved same property as was involved in other suit, and that it had been duly commenced prior to institution of other suit—Richards Brick Co v Wright, supra.

(4) Any claimant who desires enforcement of his lien must bear burden of taking necessary steps to avail himself of exclusive remedy provided by statute, and he must ascertain whether an equitable suit is pending in which lien may be adjudicated—Imse-Schilling Sash & Door Co v. Kellems, supra.

Sale after attachment of lien

Where materialman in equitable mechanics' lien action filed single blanket lien against all of five buildings involved, but prayed for all equitable and proper relief, court properly allocated percentages of such claim to each of five buildings where they had passed into hands of different owners after liens had at-claimant must proceed separately against each owner or lot for separate liens,⁷⁸ even though the contract for the improvements is a joint one by the several owners,⁷⁹ although as to the last proposition there is also contrary authority,⁸⁰ and the full force of these decisions is not maintained in several cases which adopt the view that the separate owners of several contiguous lots may so treat them as to constitute but one lot within the meaning of the statute, and that, if such owners enter into a joint contract for the construction of a building to be situated on such lots, the lien may be treated as a single one covering the entire property and foreclosed as such.⁸¹

Consolidation It is generally held, sometimes by reason of statute, that the court in its discretion may consolidate lien actions involving the same property even though the actions involve different rights and different parties.⁸² After proceedings have been consolidated or other lien claimants have been brought in by interplea under the statute the rights of all the parties should be heard and determined before an order or judgment is made,⁸³ and the action is treated as though it were a single action.⁸⁴ Consolidation has no effect except that the causes are heard at the same time, the issues remain precisely on the pleadings as they were before, between the same parties, and are determined exactly as though the causes were heard separately.⁸⁵ The trial court should endeavor within all reasonable limitations to protect the rights of all lien claimants⁸⁶ and may proceed to hear the proofs in the action first brought and grant a reasonable continuance for the hearing of the proofs in the other cases.⁸⁷ Each claim should be tried on its own merits, and should not be prejudiced by testimony relating to another.⁸⁸ Each lienholder who, in his complaint or answer, sets forth facts entitling him to a lien makes the action his own for the purpose of foreclosing such lien, and may prosecute it to a final conclusion.⁸⁹ Where a subcontractor appears in a suit in which he is named as a party claiming a lien and files an answer or cross bill setting up his claim, the fact that he had begun an independent proceeding to enforce his demand is no bar to a recovery under his cross bill, although he can have but one satisfaction,⁹⁰ and the fact that a lienor made defendant styles his cross bill as a counterclaim does not bring him within the provisions of a statute, relating to counterclaims in actions at law, requiring that the counterclaim be one existing in favor of defendant and against plaintiff, on which he may be entitled to a judgment against plaintiff.⁹¹

of the debt for which it is claimed,⁹³ or a proper tender of the amount due,⁹⁴ are properly asserted as matters of defense. In a suit by an undisclosed principal the defenses are available against him which would have been available against the agent.⁹⁵ A prior attempt to subject the interest of another in the land to a lien for the same debt is not available as a bar,⁹⁶ nor does the filing of the notice of a lien which ceases to be operative because of a failure to enforce it prevent the enforcement of a lien which is subsequently filed,⁹⁷ and the abandonment of a totally independent contract has also been held not to be a defense.⁹⁸ If the conditions exist which entitle a mechanic to a lien, the right cannot be defeated because of any collateral consequence attending the steps taken to perfect it⁹⁹ or for other reasons which do not go to the validity of the lien claimed or the right to enforce it.¹ An agreement by one whose duty it is to introduce a defense that he will not make the defense will not be

In an action by a subcontractor or materialman, the owner, it has been held, may defend on any ground available to the contractor and may take advantage of any defense which would defeat the action, if it were a personal one against the contractor, to recover for the particular work or material.³ So the owner may set up facts showing that the subcontractor or materialman has obtained no lien.⁴ A defendant contractor⁵ or his receiver⁶ may take advantage of any insufficiency of claim or proof in order to defeat a materialman's lien.

Existence or payment of other liens. Where under the statute the owner cannot be held for more than funds in his hands which are not absorbed by prior liens, if there are prior liens which exhaust such funds, the fact is a defense,⁷ but under a statute making it incumbent on the owner to see that payments to the contractor are appropriated to the outstanding claims of materialmen and laborers to the full amount of the contract price, it is no defense to the foreclosure of a materialman's lien that other materialmen may claim liens which would exceed the contract price,⁸ or that others are claiming liens which may create a future liability,⁹ since the owner may defend as against them by showing that the money paid to the contractor actually went to the discharge of liens.¹⁰ Under a contract provision permitting the owner to withhold from the amount due the contractor such sums as may be necessary to indemnify the former against claims filed by subcontractors, the filing of such claims will not defeat the contractor's right to recover the balance,¹¹ and the payment of the entire contract price on claims not legally filed with notice of plaintiff's claim will afford no defense to the latter.¹²

Duty to defend. The owner or contractor, as the case may be, is not required to defend against the liens of subcontractors.¹³

Number of defenses. Under general rules a defendant in a mechanic's lien proceeding may set up as many defenses as he has,¹⁴ whether they are such as are legal or equitable or both.¹⁵

Death of party; abatement. A mechanic's lien survives the property owner's death and may be enforced by a suit brought within the proper time after his death.¹⁶ As a general rule, the death of a party pending proceedings to enforce a mechanic's lien will not abate the proceedings.¹⁷

§ 274. — Want of Title in Defendant or Debtor

Under some statutes the defendant's want of title to the property against which a mechanic's lien is sought to be enforced is not a defense.

Under some statutes the fact that one not a party to the suit has a paramount title,¹⁸ or want of title in defendant, and allegations that the title is in the third person,¹⁹ will not defeat the action as only the interest of defendant can be bound, and a mechanic's lien on improvements alone cannot be defeated by the party who contracted for them on the ground that he had wrongfully entered upon the land of another and was a trespasser.²⁰ On the other hand, an answer by a wife made a codefendant that the land involved, although appearing to be community property from the deeds, was in fact her separate estate, which was known to the lienor, has been held to present an issue.²¹

§ 275. — Waiver and Estoppel to Assert Defenses

A party may by waiver or estoppel be precluded from resisting or attacking a mechanic's lien.

A party may by waiver or estoppel be precluded from resisting or attacking a mechanic's lien,²² but he should not be held to waive any formality

Defective work or material

(1) The right of subcontractor to a lien will not be defeated because of defects in work due to the use of improper materials furnished by contractor, the use of which was directed by contractor—Davis v Bertschinger, 241 P 53, 116 Or 127

that is necessary to perfect a mechanic's lien against him unless it clearly appears from the evidence that he actually intended to waive it, or his conduct has been such as to estop him to deny that he did waive it.²³ The fact that the owner pleads to a scire facias to enforce a lien does not waive the defense that there has not been a compliance with a condition to the right to file a lien.²⁴ Merely because a grantee purchases property subject to all liens thereon does not estop him to defend against liens.²⁵ It has been held that one who obtained a judgment on the theory that the mechanic's lien was valid is estopped to assert the invalidity of the lien in an action to enforce it.²⁶

§ 276. Recoupment, Set-Off, and Counterclaim

Proper demands against the person seeking to enforce a mechanic's lien may be urged by way of set-off, recoupment, or counterclaim.

Proper demands against the contractor may be set off or pleaded by way of recoupment or counter-

claim to defeat his lien,²⁷ the nature of the demand which may be so availed of and the manner in which it is to be set up ordinarily are controlled by the rules of local practice as to matters of recoupment, set-off, or counterclaim,²⁸ and the right of set-off is permissive but not obligatory.²⁹ The payment of the valid liens of subcontractors and materialmen may be set off against the contractor's lien.³⁰ The payments for which the owner is entitled to credit include interest on such lien claims³¹ and the expenses, such as costs and attorney's fees, of defending against them,³² but it has been held that where the owner wrongfully refuses to pay the contractor or to honor his orders for the payment of workmen, thereby causing liens to be filed, or wrongfully contests the actions brought for foreclosure of the liens, he cannot set off the costs thus caused by his own wrongful act against the claim of the contractor or his assignee.³³ plead by way of set-off a demand entirely independent of, and unrelated to, the original contract under which the work and material were furnished³⁴ or take advantage of payments to the contractor made contrary to the provisions of the statute,³⁵ but, on the principle that the statute purports to protect lien claimants only to the extent of moneys which may be due from the owner to the contractor under the original contract, it has been held that, while the owner cannot make a subsequently acquired set-off against the contractor available against the demand of a mechanic to defeat his right to resort to an indebtedness of the owner to the contractor which existed when the mechanic performed his labor,³⁶ the owner may set off an indebtedness against the contractor which existed at the time the contract was made to defeat the claims of other mechanics.³⁷ Where the contractor is the primary debtor in an action by a subcontractor in which the former is a party, he may set up by way of counterclaim or set-off any demand which he may have against the subcontractor.³⁸ Where the owner asserts his dissatisfaction with the materials furnished for which a lien is claimed, he cannot, on his liability being established, claim the right to reduction from the contract price in the amount that an allowance was made to the lienor by the one from whom the lienor purchased the materials involved because of the expense of collection rendered necessary by the contest of the materialman's claim.³⁹

Surety. It has been held that the surety on a contractor's bond is not entitled to file a cross bill where he is not liable on such bond for the lien sought to be enforced.⁴⁰ Where the lien claimant is also surety on a bond against liens, a judgment on the bond may be set off against his lien.⁴¹

§ 277. — Default in Performance

Damages resulting from a default in the performance of the contract to construct the improvement may be set up to reduce or defeat the claim to a mechanic's lien.

Damages resulting from a default in the performance of a contract for the erection of buildings or improvements, as by delay in completing performance, defects in construction and material used, and the like, may be set up to reduce or defeat the claim of the builder or mechanic⁴² in the absence of a waiver or estoppel to assert them.⁴³ This rule ap-

Equitable considerations

(1) A court of equity is governed mainly by consideration of right and justice between the parties. It does not disregard legal rights, on the contrary it follows the law, but it may allow something for what is deemed insufficient work while granting a decree for the amount found equitably due—Heberlein v Wendt, 99 Ill App 506—40 C J p 383 note 93

(2) It is immaterial that there is no express authority for such procedure in the lien law, since the authority flows from the general power of equity to settle all disputes between the parties relative to a subject matter of which it has jurisdiction—Sacchetti v. Acceptance of work

(1) In suit to enforce lien, evidence supported finding that owner

plies to the default of a subcontractor, laborer, or materialman, where the proceeding is brought by such a lien claimant,⁴⁴ and, where the general contractor is a party to the proceedings, he may set up by counterclaim a demand for damages against the subcontractor for a default in the performance of the contract.⁴⁵ In some cases, defendant in a suit to foreclose a mechanic's lien has been allowed affirmative relief, such as a personal judgment in his favor for damages arising from plaintiff's failure to construct the building according to contract,⁴⁶ although other authorities have denied the right in the absence of statutory permission.⁴⁷

Damages. The rule as to damages has been held to be the same as it would be on a quantum meruit by the builder against the owner, or by the owner against the builder for damages arising out of defective construction,⁴⁸ and a counterclaim which is based on fraud is to be treated on the same footing as though defendant had brought an action therefor grounded on fraud.⁴⁹ It has been held that liquidated damages provided for in the contract for such delay, defects, etc., may be recouped or set off against plaintiff's claim to defeat his lien in whole or in part.⁵⁰

Default of contractor against claim of subcontractor, laborer, or materialman. In many cases, particularly where the lien is not regarded as direct, but as by subrogation to the rights of the contractor, the right of the owner to deduct damages because of the default of the contractor as against the claims of subcontractors, laborers, and materialmen has been recognized,⁵¹ but according to other authorities, at least where the lien is regarded as direct and not as by subrogation, the owner is not entitled to assert as against their claims for liens any claim which he may have against the original contractor for his default in the performance of the contract⁵² except as to such damages arising out of the default of the principal contractor as may be said to have been in the contemplation of the parties when the contract was made,⁵³ and it has been paid full price, thereby accepting work as complete, so as to bar owner's recovery on cross complaint—Lyle v Latourette, 192 S W 2d 521, 209 Ark 721 held that, although the statute provides that as to liens other than that of the contractor the contract price shall not be diminished by any prior or subsequent indebtedness, offset, or counterclaim in favor of the owner and against the contractor, such provisions shall be taken to have reference to an offset not arising under the terms of the contract and as to which from an inspection of the contract materials and laborers could have no notice⁵⁴ The right to counterclaim as against the lien claimant may arise from the fact that the lien claimant is a surety on the contractor's bond,⁵⁵ and such right may also, as is sometimes the case, be given by express provision of the statute⁵⁶ In any event, the right to assert the principal contractor's default may be waived⁵⁷ or the owner may be estopped to set it up⁵⁸ So, where the owner accepts the building from the contractor as completed within the terms of the contract, he cannot thereafter recoup damages for imperfect work as against the materialman⁵⁹ In proceedings to enforce a mechanic's lien for work and materials, a trustee under a trust deed securing bonds of the owner is entitled to assert the same defenses as the owner might have done, based on the failure of the principal contractor to perform his contract, at least where there is no evidence of fraud or collusion between the parties to the contract,⁶⁰ and is bound by any waiver by the owner of the strict performance of the contract on which a mechanic's lien is based⁶¹

§ 278. Persons Entitled to Enforce

An assignee has been held to be entitled to enforce a mechanic's lien.

The person to whom the debt is due, who is the real party in interest, usually has the right to enforce the lien, as discussed infra § 283, but it has been held that one whose interest is merely in the subject matter rather than in the lien cannot enforce such lien⁶² An assignee,⁶³ including an assignee for the benefit of creditors,⁶⁴ may enforce a mechanic's lien existing in favor of the assignor.

§ 279. Persons Entitled to Contest

The enforcement of a mechanic's lien may be contested by anyone claiming an interest in the property against which the lien is sought to be enforced.

In general, anyone claiming an interest⁶⁵ or who may be affected by the judgment enforcing a mechanic's lien⁶⁶ may contest the right to the lien or the amount of the claim, as, for example, the owner⁶⁷ either at the time the lien attached or at the time it is enforced,⁶⁸ a mortgagee,⁶⁹ a subsequent purchaser or encumbrancer,⁷⁰ or a transferee for security⁷¹ A mortgagee or other lienor may show a fatal defect in the perfecting of the principal lien to enforce which the suit was instituted, as they have an interest to secure prior satisfaction of their own claims⁷² The grantee in a deed void as to the grantor's creditors but good as between the parties to it has sufficient interest to entitle him to contest the validity of such lien,⁷³ although, where the owner recognizes the existence of the debt and validity of the lien, and sells the property subject to the lien, it has been held that the purchaser who thus takes the property cannot dispute the validity of the lien.⁷⁴

One who has no interest in the property affected is not entitled to contest the validity of the lien,⁷⁵ but the promisor and surety on a bond given to discharge liens may contest them.⁷⁶

§ 280. — Contest by Contractor of Lien of Subcontractor

A general contractor may contest the lien of a subcontractor, but may not raise objections which affect only the owner of the property.

While a general contractor may contest the lien or claim of a subcontractor or materialman on objections which go to that part of the matter in which the general contractor has an interest, as that the materials were never furnished, or had been paid for, or that the charge was excessive,⁷⁷ he has no concern with objections which affect only the owner of the building and cannot set them up to defeat the lien of a materialman or subcontractor if the owner is satisfied to forego the objections.⁷⁸

§ 281. Jurisdiction and Venue

The jurisdiction of particular courts over proceedings to enforce mechanic's liens depends on the governing statutes.

The jurisdiction of particular courts over proceedings to enforce mechanics' liens depends on the particular provisions of the statutes applicable,⁷⁹ and these differ so widely that no more definite rule can be stated than that, if a particular court is designated to administer the remedy, resort must be had to that court, but, if the character of the remedy only is prescribed, the court within whose general jurisdiction and powers the subject matter falls may administer the remedy,⁸⁰ and, where the statute creating the remedy expressly prescribes the court in which it shall be pursued, that jurisdiction is exclusive.⁸¹ Where the proceeding is purely in rem, it cannot be brought in a court whose jurisdiction is limited to actions for debt or damages,⁸² and a court of limited and inferior jurisdiction which under its constitutional powers cannot deal with proceedings relating to land has no jurisdiction,⁸³ although under some of the statutes jurisdiction is conferred on courts of inferior and limited jurisdiction at least to the extent of declaring and establishing the lien even when the land cannot be sold under its order or judgment.⁸⁴ It has been held that a court does not acquire jurisdiction where on the face of the bill the lien sought to be enforced is nonexistent,⁸⁵ and that, where the

While county court possesses same power over actions to foreclose mechanics' liens, which supreme court possesses, county court possesses no equitable jurisdiction in such cases unless relief asked for is incident to and part of foreclosure proceedings, and necessary to give effect to determination in favor of or against any party to action, county court had no jurisdiction to impress

a. Time to Sue in General

Generally, a suit to enforce a mechanic's lien may not be instituted until the debt secured or some part of it is due and payable.

Unless there is a contrary provision in the statute, a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien may be instituted as soon as the amount due claimant becomes payable,⁸⁹ and at any time thereafter within the period of limitations provided by the governing statute⁹⁰ Suit may not be instituted before the debt secured is due and payable⁹¹ Thus, it has been held that suit may not be maintained to enforce a lien before the debt is due even where the contract fixes a time of payment beyond the period limited by the statute for the commencement of an action to enforce a lien⁹² However, it has been held that a proceeding may be begun, although the entire claim is not yet due,⁹³ as where a note which has not matured has been given for a portion of the price⁹⁴ Under some statutes, a lien may be enforced after the lien claim is filed if any amount is then due.⁹⁵ It has been held that, if the statute expressly provides that the proceeding may be taken after a certain time within which the money due is to be paid, it fixes a point of time before which the suit cannot be brought, and, if commenced before that time, it is premature,⁹⁶ although it has also been held that it may be sustained by voluntary appearance after the time at which it may properly be brought⁹⁷

tor,⁹⁸ but it has been held that a subcontractor may enforce his lien when payment becomes due to him and need not await the completion of the building.⁹⁹ Although the amount due the general contractor is a material issue in a proceeding by a subcontractor to enforce his lien, the fact that a proceeding to determine such amount is pending does not render the subcontractor's suit premature.¹

b. Limitations in General

Unless proceedings to enforce a mechanic's lien are instituted within the time prescribed by the statute, the right to enforce the lien will be barred or the lien discharged.

The mechanics' lien statutes generally prescribe a period of limitation within which a suit to enforce a mechanic's lien must be instituted,² and, where proceedings to enforce the lien are not instituted within the time prescribed by the statute, the right to enforce the lien will be barred or the lien itself discharged,³ unless an order continuing the lien is obtained,⁴ although the right to recover on the debt secured may remain.⁵ The time for enforcement fixed by the statute has been held by many authorities to enter into, and be a part of, the right of lien,⁶ and the statute in making such provision has been regarded as not a pure statute of limitations,⁷ but other statutes have been held to be statutes of limitation,⁸ and to affect the remedy but not the lien.⁹ It has been held that a failure to institute action to enforce the lien within the time limited by the statute may be waived, as by a failure to plead it,¹⁰ but it has also been held that the matter is juris-

dictional¹¹ and may not be waived¹² Where the statute contains no limitations as to time on the right of claimant to enforce the lien created by it as against the debtor, the right to enforce the lien is not affected by delay¹³

Operation of statute. It has been held that the particular time in which the lien claimant may be allowed to commence his action is a matter of procedure and may be controlled by a statute passed after the contract out of which the lien arises was entered into, enlarging the time in which to commence the action¹⁴ There is, however, authority to the effect that the time within which a lien must be enforced is controlled by the provision of the statute as it existed at the time the contract was entered into¹⁵

Applicability of general statutes The provision contained in the act conferring the lien controls over the provisions of limitation acts relating to other causes of action¹⁶

Construction of provisions The statutory provision limiting the period within which proceedings to enforce mechanic's liens must be instituted is to be liberally construed to effect its purpose¹⁷ Provisions as to the time within which the lien claim shall be filed and prescribing the time within which action must be begun should be construed together¹⁸ Where, under the express provision of the statute, on the abandonment of the work by the contractor, the subcontractor or party furnishing material may enforce his lien to the same extent that the contractor might, the limitations applicable to a contractor and not to a subcontractor apply to the subcontractor's claim on abandonment by the contractor¹⁹

Suit against contractor. A mechanic's lien statute requiring a subcontractor to obtain judgment against the contractor before instituting action to enforce his lien and limiting the time within which the contractor must be sued does not govern as to the period within which the action to enforce the lien against the owner must be instituted²⁰

The institution of proceedings to enforce a mechanic's lien has been held to stop the running of the statute of limitations only as to those persons made parties to the action, and an action which does not include all necessary parties has been held not to stop the running of the statute.

The institution of proceedings to enforce a mechanic's lien has been held to stop the running of the statute of limitations only as to those persons made parties to the action.²³ An action which does not include all necessary parties has been held not to stop the running of the statute,²⁴ and, where the statute requires that the contractor be party to a suit by a subcontractor or materialman to enforce a lien, the suit is not commenced within the limitations provision until he is made party, although proceedings were previously instituted against the owner²⁵

Owner Where an action to enforce a mechanic's lien is not instituted against the owner within the statutory time, it may not be enforced as against him,²⁶ and it would seem that in such case the lien is barred and is not enforceable, although other encumbrancers or lien claimants are made parties and served with process,²⁷ and is properly dismissed for want of prosecution,²⁸ the objection being one which may be urged by other lien claimants or parties in interest²⁹ Moreover, as discussed infra subdivision h of this section, the defect may not be cured by joining the owner as a party after the statutory period has expired It has been held that the time within which an action must be begun cannot be extended as against another encumbrancer by an agreement between the lienor and the owner³⁰

Other lien claimants and parties in interest By express provision of some of the lien statutes no person is bound by an action to enforce the lien provided, unless made a party to the proceedings to enforce it within a period fixed,³¹ and generally under statutes making the time within which proceedings shall be instituted a part of the right to a lien, it ceases to exist as against all those whose rights, estates, or interests are claimed to be adverse and subordinate, unless they are made parties to an action to foreclose the lien within the statutory period,³² and this is true, although a proceeding to which they have not been made parties has been instituted in time³³ However, this rule has been held not to apply as to subsequent purchasers and encumbrancers in the absence of a statutory requirement that they be made parties to the lien proceedings³⁴ The statute sometimes particularly provides the period within which proceedings must be commenced as against other creditors and encumbrancers, the effect of which is that, if the proceeding is not brought within the time prescribed, the lien becomes unavailable as against such other creditors and encumbrancers,³⁵ but it has been held that the owner has no concern with this provision and that only the creditor or encumbrancer who comes within it can complain of a violation thereof.³⁶ Where the lien has been seasonably established in an action at law or otherwise, although the encumbrancer was not made a party thereto, a bill in equity which seeks merely the determination of priorities between the lienor and the encumbrancer is not such a suit for the enforcement of the lien as must be begun within a statutory period after the maturity of the indebtedness,³⁷ but, where the lien is one which cannot be enforced at law, the suit in equity, being a primary proceeding for the establishment of the lien, must be begun within the period fixed by statute.³⁸

d. When Period Begins to Run

The point from which the statutory period within which an action to enforce a mechanic's lien must be instituted begins to run depends entirely on, and must be gathered from, the statute itself.

Commencement of work or delivery of materials. Where the statute so provides, proceedings to establish a mechanic's lien for labor or materials must be begun within a specified period after the commencement of the work or delivery of the materials.⁴⁰

Filing of lien claim or statement. Under various provisions the proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien is to be brought within a fixed time from the filing of the lien or claim,⁴¹ and it has been held that, if the lien is filed before the expiration of the period limited therefor, the limitation of the proceeding to enforce it will nevertheless run from the filing,⁴² and that the failure to file a lien does not relieve from the necessity of bringing the action within the statutory period from the time when the lien should have been filed.⁴³ Where the right to file a new or amended claim of lien exists, the time of beginning the action runs from the filing of an amended claim.⁴⁴ It has been held that, where receivership proceedings have been begun, an intervening petition within the time fixed by the court for proof of claims may entitle the lienor to enforcement of his claim, although the intervening petition is not filed until more than the statutory period has elapsed after the filing of the lien claim.⁴⁵

Maturity of claim or accrual of indebtedness
Under some statutes, the lien proceeding must be commenced within the period, prescribed after the accrual of the indebtedness or the arrival of the time of payment,⁴⁶ or the expiration of the term of credit where credit is given,⁴⁷ and a statute which prescribes a limitation of a number of days within which to enforce the lien by proper proceedings after the expiration of a credit given does not, without more, refer only to liens based on direct contract with the owner.⁴⁸ If no credit is given by the contractor the debt becomes due when the material is furnished,⁴⁹ or when the contract has been performed.⁵⁰

The last item on an account filed, in the absence of anything else showing that it matured by agreement at a different date, may be treated as the date of the indebtedness sought to be secured by lien.⁵¹

Under some of the statutes, where the payments become due in installments, the proceedings may be brought within the time prescribed after the payment of the last installment is due,⁵² but, under other statutes, the period of limitations commences on default in any payment.⁵³ It has been held that the time within which a subcontractor must institute action is determined, not by the time when the contractor is to be paid, but by the date of payment as fixed in the contract between the contractor and subcontractor.⁵⁴

furnished,⁵⁶ or last work done,⁵⁷ or from the completion of the work where continuous labor is performed under the entire contract⁵⁸

Where the work is done or materials furnished at different times under one contract, the time will begin to run from the date of the last work, or at the time the last item of material was furnished,⁵⁹ but a single lien cannot cover several distinct improvements made at different times and independent of each other, in such a case the suit must be brought within the statutory period after the labor on the particular improvement is finished in order to enforce a lien for that improvement⁶⁰ Where the statute requires suit to be brought within a prescribed period after the work is completed, it refers to the particular work undertaken either by the original contractor or by a subcontractor⁶¹ Where the contract is entire and the building is substantially completed and is treated by all parties as completed, the limitation will run, although there may be minor and unimportant details of the work left undone, especially if intervening rights have attached in favor of third persons,⁶² but substantial performance will not start the running of the statute where work is thereafter done in good faith within a reasonable time and in accord with the terms of the contract and such work is necessary to a finished performance⁶³ Under a statute fixing the completion of the building as the point from which the period of limitations is computed, the owner's acceptance of a building from the contractor will not start limitations running as against a materialman where substantial materials or labor are placed in the building by others after such acceptance.⁶⁴

has completed his work, the time for filing a lien runs from the time of his discharge⁶⁵ So, where the lienee induces a termination of the contract before it has been completed by the lienor, the limitation runs from that time, nothing further having been done under the contract,⁶⁶ and, where the lienor stops work because of the default of the lienee, the statutory period has been held to run from that time⁶⁷ Where the owner completes the building under terms of the contract authorizing him to do so on default of the principal contractor, the rights of the materialmen are determined as if completion had been by the contractor⁶⁸

e Nature of Proceeding Required in General

In order to toll the running of limitations, the proceeding which is instituted to enforce the lien must be such as is contemplated by statute.

In order to toll the running of limitations, the proceeding which is instituted to enforce the lien must be such as is contemplated by statute⁶⁹ Where a court of law has no jurisdiction to render a decree, its judgment does not prevent the running of limitations as against the appropriate proceeding in equity⁷⁰ An application for permission to sue to enforce the lien or the grant of such permission has been held not to be a commencement of the action required by the statute.⁷¹

f. Assertion of Lien in Other Proceedings

The requirement that the lienor institute proceedings to enforce the lien within the statutory period is met where the lienor properly asserts his lien within the statutory time in a proceeding instituted by others.

A statutory limitation of the time for asserting a lien claim has been held to apply to a claimant made a party defendant to the suit of another lien claimant,⁷² or to a claimant who intervenes in such a suit,⁷³ or who asserts his lien by cross bill in a proceeding not to enforce a mechanic's lien,⁷⁴ although there is authority to the contrary where the statute allows one or more lien claimants to bring an action to which all others are to be parties for the purpose, among other things, of ascertaining the amount of all other liens with which plaintiff must share the proceeds.⁷⁵ It has been held that the lienor's rights are preserved where he is made party defendant to a suit instituted within the statutory period by another lienor,⁷⁶ or a suit whose purpose is to effect a proper distribution of the proceeds of the sale of the property against which the lien is claimed.⁷⁷ Proceedings to enforce the lien of a defendant or intervener have been regarded as not commenced as of the date on which the original action was instituted,⁷⁸ but as of the time a pleading setting forth the claim to a lien is filed.⁷⁹ A mere appearance in the action, it has been held, is not enough,⁸⁰ but the filing of an answer⁸¹ or cross bill,⁸² or a petition in intervention⁸³ setting forth the claim within the time prescribed, is as effectual as the bringing of an independent proceeding. Unless the statute requires the service of a cross complaint, it is sufficient that it be filed within the statutory time.⁸⁴ One who timely instituted a suit to enforce his mechanic's lien has been held to be entitled to pursue his remedy in a pending equity suit, although made party to such suit after

Statutory provision for continuing. Under a statute providing that the lien shall be continued if the lienor is made a party defendant in an action to enforce another lien, the action which will keep the lien alive must be an action to foreclose the lien created by the lienor.⁸⁶ An action to foreclose a mortgage is not within such a provision.⁸⁷ However, such a provision does not limit the effect of an answer in the nature of a cross bill by a lienor.⁸⁸ Such a statute applies as to a lienor who is served with summons within the time within which an action to enforce a mechanic's lien must be brought, although other defendants are not served within such time.⁸⁹

Where a suit is brought by the owner to determine the validity of the liens of respective claimants, the lien of a claimant who was not a party to prior suits by other claimants and who has not proceeded to enforce his lien within the time prescribed by statute cannot be allowed.⁹⁰

g. When Proceedings Deemed Instituted

Under the various statutes, proceedings to enforce a mechanic's lien have been regarded as instituted when process is served, when the summons is issued, when the summons is delivered to the officer with the intent that it be served immediately, or on the filing of a complaint, bill, or petition.

Issuance of summons

Under mechanics' lien statute, even if equitable suit is pending in which lien of claimant may be adjudicated, if summons is not issued for claimant within period in which he must commence his action, his remedy is to enter his appearance and plead in the equitable suit before expiration of such period, in which event his action is commenced in time.—Imse-Schilling Sash & Door Co v Kellems, 179 SW 3d 910, 237 Mo App 960—Richards Brick Co v Wright, 82 SW 2d 274, 231 Mo App 946.

Under some statutes, a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien is not regarded as begun until process has been served, which must be on the necessary parties and within the period prescribed for the life of the lien,⁹¹ or the necessary parties must have appeared,⁹² and it is not sufficient that the complaint be filed⁹³ or that process issue⁹⁴ within such period, and that service be had thereafter. Under other statutes, the suit is commenced within the limitation period when the summons is issued within it,⁹⁵ although served afterward.⁹⁶ The proceedings are deemed commenced under other statutes when the summons is delivered to the officer with the intent that it be served immediately.⁹⁷

Under still other provisions, the proceeding is regarded as begun on the filing of a complaint, bill, or petition,⁹⁸ the filing of which within the statutory period is sufficient without regard to the time of service of process or other steps necessary to be taken in the progress of the cause,⁹⁹ provided the issuance of summons is not delayed or obstructed by the lienor.¹ It has also been held under some statutes that the proceeding is not regarded as begun until process has been served² and a petition has been filed,³ and it is not sufficient that a complaint has been filed where process has not been served,⁴ or that process has been served where no complaint has been filed.⁵

Where beginning of publication of service on nonresident owners was within the period, but it was not completed until after the period had expired, action was commenced in due time, since it was not necessary that service be completed within that time—Neukirch v Wong, 81 P 2d 499, 195 Wash 451.

h. Amendment after Expiration of Period

A defect which does not go to the validity of the lien may be cured by amendment after the time limited for commencing the proceeding, but necessary parties may not be joined after such time.

A defect which does not go to the validity of the lien may be cured by amendment after the time limited for commencing the proceeding,⁸ as where the cause of action is not changed,⁹ but an amendment after the time limited to supply a step which is prerequisite to the validity of the lien itself cannot be allowed, since the lien has been discharged by the omission,¹⁰ nor can additional property be included by amendment after the lien is barred,¹¹ or an entirely new cause of action set up.¹²

Procedure

In order to make general contractor a party defendant after the return date of the writ of scire facias, contractor as defendant after the expiration of the statutory period in an action by a materialman or subcontractor will not affect the original action which was brought in time,¹⁹ at least where the owner is not prejudiced.²⁰ It has been held that, where in proceedings to foreclose a mortgage a receiver of the property involved has been appointed, the receiver may be brought in by amendment after the period for limitations for foreclosing the mechanic's lien has expired.²¹ The fact that trustees of a prior mortgage against whom no relief was sought were not brought in until after the period of limitations had expired is no ground for defeating the mechanic's lien as against the mortgagor.²²

1. Prosecution of Proceedings

Diligent prosecution has been required of suits to enforce mechanic's liens.

The requirements of the statute in respect of the steps to be taken in the prosecution of the lien claim must be pursued,²³ and a diligent prosecution of a mechanic's lien suit has been required in order to preserve the lien.²⁴ Under some statutes, a failure of diligence is presumed where judgment has not been rendered within a specified time.²⁵

§ 283. Parties Plaintiff

A suit to enforce a mechanic's lien should be brought by, and in the name of, the real party in interest.

The rule that an action should be brought by, and in the name of, the real party in interest is applied to suit to enforce mechanics' liens,²⁶ but one has no such interest as will make him a proper party to enforce such lien unless that interest is in the lien itself as distinguished from a mere interest in the result of the action.²⁷ Where the lienor, before the commencement of an action to enforce the lien, assigns a part of his claim to another person, such assignee is not a necessary party to the action.²⁸ Under a statute which entitles a subcontractor or materialman to an accounting from an owner on whom he has served notice of his claim, a subcontractor may sue in his own name where he has given the requisite notice,²⁹ and in such case the general contractor may not sue for such claim,³⁰ but suit may be brought in the general contractor's name where the notice has not been given.³¹ Under the rule that, when a contract, not under seal, is made with an agent in his own name for an undisclosed principal, whether or not he describes himself to be an agent, either the agent or principal may sue on the contract, an undisclosed principal may sue to enforce the lien under a contract made the proceeding may be stayed and a writ of scire facias issued commanding the appearance of general contractor at a date designated therein, or a rule may be granted, returnable within a reasonable time and before final adjournment of the term of court at which original scire facias was returnable, requiring general contractor to show cause why he should not be brought in and made a party defendant, the second method of procedure being preferred—Westinghouse Electric Supply Co v Franklin Institute of State of Pennsylvania for Promotion of Mechanic Arts, supra.

with the agent,³² and, if a party does business in his own name as agent for an undisclosed principal and files the lien in the same name, the action to enforce the lien is properly brought in that name³³

Joinder of plaintiffs. If the cause of action accrues jointly to more than one, all must join and the action cannot be maintained by one in his own name³⁴. Two or more persons may join if they together have furnished the work or materials and are jointly interested in the lien,³⁵ but one who has no interest in the lien itself, although he may have an interest in the subject matter of the recovery, cannot be joined with the party who is entitled to the lien, and, if there is such an unauthorized joinder, a judgment cannot be rendered in favor of the former,³⁶ but, if there is no objection to the form of the petition, the judgment may be rendered for the party entitled to the lien under the contract³⁷. Where a contractor is a proper party in an equitable suit by a subcontractor, it has been held immaterial whether he is joined as plaintiff or defendant, under the general equity rule³⁸

Partnership. Where work is done or materials are furnished by copartners, the partners must join in an action to enforce the lien,³⁹ and, where the contract is made in the name of one partner, but for the benefit of both, and they jointly perform the contract, it has been held that they may maintain a joint action to enforce the lien⁴⁰. The nonjoinder of a partner is not, however, available in a suit by the member in whose name the contract was made, the firm doing business in his name, where the answer admitted the making of the contract alleged and there was no amendment of the answer.⁴¹

All persons who have an interest in the property on which the mechanic's lien is claimed or in the subject matter of the controversy are proper, and, under some statutes, necessary parties to an action to enforce the lien.

All persons who have an interest in the property on which the mechanic's lien is claimed or in the subject matter of the controversy,⁴² or whose presence may be necessary for a complete determination of the matters involved in the action or suit,⁴³ may properly be made parties defendant in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien, and are necessary parties under some statutes,⁴⁴ as well as under the rules in equity governing the subject of parties,⁴⁵ at least in so far as their joinder is necessary for the purpose of concluding them by the proceedings and judgment.⁴⁶ On the other hand, one who is not interested or who cannot be prejudicially affected by the proceedings and judgment is not a necessary party.⁴⁷ The lien statute sometimes designates the particular classes of persons who must be made parties to the proceeding.⁴⁸

In suit by assignee Under the rule requiring all parties in interest to be before the court, the assignor of the claim is a proper, if not a necessary, party to a proceeding by the assignee.⁴⁹ An assignee who assigns all of his rights and interests is not, it has been held, a necessary party in a suit by his assignee,⁵⁰ but, in an action by an assignee of the builder's claim under an assignment made expressly subject to a prior assignment, it seems that the omission of the prior assignee creates a defect of parties.⁵¹

b. Owner Generally

The owner of the property or interest against which the lien is claimed is a necessary party to a suit to enforce a mechanic's lien.

The owner of the property or of the interest sought to be charged is a necessary party to a suit to enforce a mechanic's lien,⁵² and under statutory provisions requiring the owner to be made a party, the word "owner" has been held to mean the person for whom, as the owner of the land, the building is constructed, etc.,⁵³ or the person on whose interest in the property the lien is claimed.⁵⁴ Where a contract is made by trustees vested with the legal estate and full management of the property involved, the beneficiaries are not necessary parties to a proceeding to enforce the lien.⁵⁵ The holders of the legal title and of an equitable reversionary title must be joined where the contract is made with holders of the equitable title and adopted as its own by the holder of the legal title.⁵⁶

Joint owners A joint owner of the land is a necessary party under a statute requiring all parties in interest to be joined,⁵⁷ but, where a contract made with one of two joint owners creates a lien on the whole property and a personal liability only on the party to the contract, the lien may be enforced in a suit against the latter alone,⁵⁸ and it has also been held that, on the theory that the interest of an omitted owner cannot be bound by any judgment in the suit from which he was omitted, a

Lessor and lessee. In proceedings to establish a lien on a building erected on leased premises,⁶¹ or on the building and the leasehold interest,⁶² the lessor has been held by some decisions to be a necessary party However, under the view that the person whose interest it is sought to charge is the person intended by a statute requiring the owner to be made a party, it has been held that the lessor is not a necessary party where it is sought to reach a leasehold interest only⁶³ The owner of a leasehold interest in the premises has been held a necessary party⁶⁴

Change in, or transfer of, title Where there has been a change of ownership in the premises against which it is sought to enforce the lien, it has generally been held that the proceedings are properly brought against the owner at the time they are instituted,⁶⁵ and in some cases he has been held to be a necessary or indispensable party,⁶⁶ at least if the judgment is to be effective as against his inter-

Creditors of deceased property owner are not proper parties to mechanics' lien suit, since personal representative is to protect creditors' interests—Fleming v Kirkland, 146 So 384, 236 Ala 222.

suit is brought to enforce the lien, then, under the rule that a lien cannot be declared in a proceeding to which the owner of the property is not a party, it is held that his heirs must be made parties to the suit,⁷⁹ and the statutory provision for reviving suits against the personal representatives alone would apply only where the suit is begun in the lifetime of the owner.⁸⁰ However, in the proceeding in which the heirs are parties, the personal representative may be joined.⁸¹ On the other hand where the personal estate is liable to the payment of the judgment and the lien is but an additional security, both the heirs and the administrator are necessary parties.⁸² In other cases, turning on the terms of the statutes, it has been held that the heirs need not be made parties but that it is sufficient to make the administrator a party.⁸³ Where the lien attaches to the extent of the interest of the owner and does not create a personal claim against such owner, if the executors have no interest in the land by devise or otherwise the proceeding cannot be maintained against them.⁸⁴ Where the interest of decedent had ceased and no personal liability exists as against his estate, his heirs or representatives need not be made parties.⁸⁵

c. Husband and Wife

The owner's spouse may be a proper party to a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien where it is sought to affect any interest the spouse may have in the property.

Except as the rule may be modified by statutes removing disabilities of married women,⁸⁶ where the contract is the sole act of the husband, the wife is not a proper party to proceedings to foreclose a lien on land held by the husband and wife in fee,⁸⁷ and, if a married woman having no power to contract so as to bind her estate joins with her husband in a contract, she does not create a lien on her estate and she is not properly joined in a suit to foreclose the lien, but the suit may be continued against the husband for the purpose of selling his interest to satisfy the lien.⁸⁸ Where the contract may give rise to a valid lien on the married woman's estate, she is a necessary party to a proceeding to enforce the lien,⁸⁹ although the husband may be a proper person to be joined as a party in interest under the statute,⁹⁰ or in order to answer to any interest or right of redemption which he may claim in the property,⁹¹ and for this last purpose he is a necessary party under an allegation in the petition that he has some interest in the property.⁹² Under the common-law rule requiring the joinder of the husband in actions against the wife, a husband must be joined in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien as against her,⁹³ but under statutes with respect to contracts of married women, the husband has been held not to be a necessary party in a proceeding to enforce a lien against the wife's separate property on a contract made with her.⁹⁴

Homestead, dower, and curtesy A wife having a homestead in her husband's land which may be divested by a decree and sale is properly joined as a defendant, although she is not a party to the contract,⁹⁵ as she has an adverse interest which makes her a proper party for a complete determination of the questions involved, although it may turn out that the land is not a homestead and the inchoate right of dower cannot be divested in the action.⁹⁶ The wife is not, however, a necessary party where the lien attaches before the land became a homestead,⁹⁷ or where the homestead right is otherwise inferior to that of the mechanic's lien.⁹⁸ The wife of the owner⁹⁹ and of the owner's contractual vendor¹ should be made parties if it is desired to divest them of a potential right of dower, but the failure to make them parties is not fatal since the purchaser under a judgment of foreclosure can take title only subject to such right of dower,² and it has been held that, where the wife's dower is in all of the land of which a husband is seized during coverture and cannot be affected except by lien as prescribed by law, she is not a proper party to a lien suit where her only interest is the dower.³ A wife is not a necessary party to a suit to enforce a lien on an estate by the curtesy.⁴

Community property Under the community property system, the wife is properly joined where it is alleged that the husband in contracting for the improvement was acting for the benefit of the community,⁵ and it has been held that the wife is a necessary party to a proceeding to foreclose a lien on community property, notwithstanding the husband individually incurred the debt which the lien secures,⁶ except perhaps in a case where the husband holds the record title and claimant had no knowledge that the debtor had a wife.⁷ However, it has also been held that the wife is not a necessary party to an action against the husband to foreclose

Partnership property In an action to enforce a lien on partnership real estate, the wives of the partners are not necessary parties.⁹

d. Other Lienors and Encumbrancers in General

Other lienors and encumbrancers are proper parties to a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, but are not necessary parties unless required by statute.

The statutes frequently contemplate the determination of the rights of all lienors, encumbrancers, or other parties interested in the property in one proceeding, and, under such statutes, such persons are proper parties in order that they may be bound,¹⁰ and the same is true under the rules governing the equity practice.¹¹ However, unless otherwise provided by statute, other lienors and encumbrancers are not necessary parties to a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien,¹² at least where complainant does not seek priority over such other liens,¹³ but if they are not made parties they are not bound by the decree or proceedings thereunder.¹⁴ The statutes, however, may make other lienors necessary parties,¹⁵ as where they expressly declare that all lienors shall be joined,¹⁶ and, under some statutes, this applies as to subsequent lienors and encumbrancers.¹⁷ Similarly, in the absence of a statute requiring it, subsequent encumbrancers¹⁸ or claimants of mechanics' liens¹⁹ are not necessary parties unless it is sought to determine their rights.²⁰ A statute providing that other lienors and encumbrancers may be joined and that those not joined shall not be bound by the judgment does not make such persons necessary parties to a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien.²¹

It has been held that a statutory provision requiring that persons having liens subsequent to that of plaintiff shall be made parties defendant does not require the joinder of such parties as indispensable to the entry of a decree binding the parties before the court, but the intent of it is only that such parties shall be joined in order that a decree may be rendered which will bind all parties interested in the land and under which a sale may be effected which will transfer the title to the purchaser free from all liens and encumbrances.²²

Purchaser or encumbrancer pendente lite Persons acquiring liens other than mechanics' liens, after the commencement of a suit to foreclose a mechanic's lien, are not necessary parties to the latter,²³ and a purchaser pendente lite need not be made a party to the mechanic's lien proceeding.²⁴

e. Mortgages; Trust Deeds

ceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien unless it is sought to subject his interest to the lien.

In the absence of a statute otherwise providing,²⁵ a mortgagee is not a necessary party to a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien,²⁶ but one seeking to establish a mechanic's lien must make a mortgagee of the premises a party if he desires to bind the interest of the mortgagee.²⁷ The rule that the mortgagee is a necessary party where his interest is sought to be subjected to the lien is followed even in the absence of a statute requiring it,²⁸ and it is expressly required by the provisions of some lien laws.²⁹ It is generally held that a mortgagee is a proper party,³⁰ but on the ground that the mechanic's lien is subject to the prior encumbrance, it has been held that a prior mortgagee is improperly made a party.³¹ Where the statute specifically designates who shall be parties and mortgagees are not included, it has been held that by construction they are excluded,³² but a mechanics' lien statute by expressly requiring all mechanics' lien claimants to be joined does not impliedly exclude the propriety of joining a mortgagee.³³ A prior mortgagee of record is not a proper party under a statute requiring that every person holding a mortgage of record which would be cut off should be made a party.³⁴ Further, where the jurisdiction of the lien proceedings is conferred on a court of limited powers and jurisdiction, mortgagees may not be proper parties for the reason that such a court cannot fully adjudicate the rights and claims of different classes of

Record. It has been held that a statute providing that the holders of unrecorded mortgages and liens need not be made parties to a mortgage foreclosure does not apply to an action to enforce a mechanic's lien³⁶ Where the statute requires all persons holding mortgages of record which will be cut off to be made parties, only a mortgagee of record need be made a party,³⁷ notwithstanding the lien claimant may have had notice of the existence of the mortgage at the time he commences his suit³⁸ Where the property is misdescribed in the mortgage, so that the record does not constitute constructive notice, the mortgagee need not be made a party in the absence of actual notice³⁹

Junior mortgagees A subsequent mortgagee is not in the absence of statute a necessary party,⁴⁰ although he may be joined,⁴¹ and if not joined his rights, whatever they may be, are not affected⁴² By statute, however, subsequent mortgagees may be required to be joined,⁴³ and under a statute requiring all parties claiming of record any right, title, interest, or equity whose title or interests are to be charged with, or affected by, the lien to be made parties, a subsequent mortgagee is a necessary party where his rights are in any manner to be affected⁴⁴ Where the statute contemplates notice to be given to one party only as owner to answer the suit, a subsequent mortgagee is not entitled to notice,⁴⁵ particularly where he has not taken possession⁴⁶

Trust deed Under some statutes, the holder of a deed of trust on the property sought to be subjected to the lien has been held to be a necessary party⁴⁷ Under the equity rule that all persons interested should be made parties in a chancery proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, and under statutes in effect adopting such rule, where a trust deed has been given to secure a debt, the trustee and the cestui que trust should be made parties to the proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien,⁴⁸ if it is sought to bind them⁴⁹ However, it has been held that a trustee under a subsequent deed of trust is not a necessary party,⁵⁰ and that, where the petitioner subordinates his lien to that of a prior trust deed, the holder of the note secured is not a necessary party,⁵¹ and, where a sale is ordered subject to the trust deed and there has been no timely objection to the omission of the holder of the note, it cannot be complained of by the owner⁵² The cestui que trust is an indispensable party where plaintiff seeks a decree establishing the priority of his right as against the title represented by the trust deed, and a decree cannot be rendered establishing such priority in the absence of such party,⁵³ although the decree may be binding on the other parties to the suit in so far as it passes only on the rights and obligations as between themselves⁵⁴ While it may be better that the trustee should be made a party with a view to conclude him and those whom he represents, he is not an indispensable party to the statutory foreclosure of a lien which cannot be affected by the trust deed, there being nothing in the statute requiring it⁵⁵

Assignee of mortgage or debt The assignee of record of a prior mortgage must be made a party in order to charge him with any default of the assignor⁵⁶ Where, however, the parties to the mortgage as shown by the record and of whom the lien claimant has knowledge or notice are joined, the judgment cannot be regarded as a nullity as to an unknown and undisclosed assignee of the mortgage note,⁵⁷ and this is more particularly true where the mortgage is not given of record until after the lien claimant's rights had attached to the property.⁵⁸

Termination of interest The mortgagee of a prior mortgage who has foreclosed it pending the mechanic's lien proceeding is without further interest and the proceeding should be dismissed as to him⁵⁹ So, where, after the action is brought and before trial and judgment, the mortgage is foreclosed and a defendant becomes a purchaser, the interest of the mortgagee having ceased, it is immaterial whether or not he is a party⁶⁰ A mortgagee who has conveyed all of his interest in the property before the bill to enforce the lien is filed is not a proper or necessary party where no attempt is made to obtain any personal decree against him⁶¹ However, if the answer admits the ownership, a defect in the complaint, in that such ownership was not sufficiently alleged, will be cured⁶² General allegations

as to the interests of third persons made defendants will be sufficient if enough appears to disclose the rights of such parties,⁶³ and it has been held sufficient to allege merely that such persons claim some right or interest in the property in question so as to require them to set up their interests or claims,⁶⁴ and that the rule requiring complainant to state a cause of action against all who are made defendants does not apply to one who was made a party to answer to his supposed or possible but unknown or undefined interest in the property to be affected⁶⁵

On the other hand, it has been held that a mere allegation that a defendant claims an interest in and to the property is insufficient to support a default decree foreclosing all the interest of defendant in the premises,⁶⁶ since such an allegation does not show that the claim of such defendant was inferior to that of the mechanic's lienor,⁶⁷ and that a decree subjecting the interest of a particular defendant cannot be sustained in the absence of allegations showing the liability of such interest⁶⁸ So notwithstanding a statute providing that all parties claiming of record any right, title, interest, or equity in the property may be made parties, plaintiff must state a cause of action against those whom he makes parties,⁶⁹ and a mere allegation that plaintiff is informed that defendant claims some interest of record in the property is insufficient⁷⁰ An allegation that certain parties other than the owner have or claim to have some interest in the premises is not an admission that they had any interest⁷¹

Special judgment In an action in which the judgment and execution are special, the latter being directed to be levied on defendant's interest in the land, the declaration properly concludes with an

avermert that the debt is a lien on defendant's interest in the land without describing that interest ⁷²

Action for personal judgment. Where the complaint alleges facts which show a personal liability and the lien and its foreclosure is collateral thereto, a personal judgment may be sustained, although there is no allegation that defendant is the owner of, or is asserting any interest in, the land ⁷³ A complaint which does not allege that defendant, against whom the lien was sought to be enforced, was the owner or proprietor of the property, and not alleging who such owner or proprietor was, cannot be sustained under a statute allowing one who has furnished material to a contractor to give notice to the owner to answer under oath as to the amount of indebtedness to the contractor on his contract where such complaint has been amended by striking out the contractor as a party ⁷⁴

f. Persons Personally Liable for Debt Secured in General

Persons personally liable for the debt secured by the lien are proper, and under some statutes necessary, parties to a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien.

Where the lien statute provides for a personal deficiency judgment, as discussed infra § 330, one who is personally liable on the indebtedness secured is a proper party, ⁷⁵ and, under the view that the existence of the lien depends on the existence of the debt for which the lien stands as security and that the fact of indebtedness can be determined only in a proper judicial proceeding to which the debtor is made a party, the person personally liable for the debt is a necessary party. ⁷⁶ However, the fact that a personal judgment cannot be rendered will not defeat the enforcement of the lien ⁷⁷

Parties to the contract. Parties to the contract on which the lien is based are proper parties, ⁷⁸ and under some statutes are necessary parties ⁷⁹ The parties intended are the parties to the particular contract which is the subject of inquiry ⁸⁰

Sureties In a suit by a materialman or subcontractor, the surety on the general contractor's bond to the owner is a proper party ⁸¹ A surety on a bond conditioned for the protection of a vendee in the event of the determination of the vendor's liability is a proper, although not a necessary, party to a suit in which the vendor is joined as a defendant ⁸²

g. General Contractor

In a proceeding to enforce the lien of a subcontractor or materialman, the general contractor is a proper party, and under some, but not other, statutes a necessary party.

In a proceeding against the owner by a subcontractor or materialman to enforce his lien, the contractor is a proper party, ⁸³ even under circumstances which render him an unnecessary party, ⁸⁴ for the purpose of avoiding a multiplicity of suits ⁸⁵ However, in some jurisdictions it has been held that, at least in so far as the rights of the owner are concerned, the contractor is not, in the absence of a statutory requirement, a necessary party,⁸⁶ but in many other jurisdictions, sometimes by reason of statutory provision, the contractor has been held to be a necessary party.⁸⁷ Under a statute requiring that the parties to the contract be parties to the proceeding, the original contractor is a necessary party where the materialman seeks to enforce his lien through the privity arising from the agreement between the original contractor and the owner,⁸⁸ but a lien claimant complies with the statute by making a subcontractor with whom he dealt a party.⁸⁹

Where, under the statute, there can be no valid judgment of foreclosure of a materialman's lien in the absence of a valid judgment in favor of the materialman against the contractor, the contractor is a necessary party to a proceeding by the materialman unless plaintiff has a judgment against the contractor.⁹⁰ Under a statute requiring the parties to the controversy to be made parties, it has been held that, while the contractor is a necessary party to a suit by the subcontractor or materialman in the sense that the owner may require that he be made a party,⁹¹ he is not an indispensable party.⁹² A provision of the statute requiring the contractor to defend actions brought by a subcontractor or persons other than the original contractor at his own expense has been held by some courts to make the original contractor a necessary party,⁹³ but it has also been held that such a provision makes him merely a proper, and not a necessary, party.⁹⁴

Under a statute providing that all persons whose liens are filed and other encumbrancers shall be made parties, where the action is brought by a subcontractor, the principal contractor has been held to be an indispensable party.⁹⁵ Where the right of a subcontractor to foreclose a mechanic's lien depends on the fact that payments were made by the owner to the general contractor to whom they were due under the contract, the contractor is a necessary party in order that the owner may be protected as against such contractor by the judgment concluding the facts on which the right of the subcontractor to recover depends.⁹⁶ Where the statute under which the action is brought creates a duty directly on the part of the owner to the materialman or laborer, the action for a breach of such duty is not for the enforcement of a lien and the general contractor has been held not to be a necessary party;⁹⁷ nor, it has been held, is the contractor a necessary party under a statute confining the subcontractor's lien to the amount due from the owner to the principal contractor at the time of the service of notice on the owner.⁹⁸ Where the statute does not expressly or by implication require the principal contractor to be a party and the subcontractor is not required to exhaust his remedy against the principal contractor before proceeding against the property, and in an action by the subcontractor the owner may interpose any defense which would be available to the contractor, it has been held that, while the contractor is a proper, he is not a necessary, party, so as to require a stay of proceedings until service of process on the nonresident contractor.⁹⁹ The contractor has been held not united in interest with the owner within the meaning of a statute requiring persons so united to be joined.¹

The contractor is a necessary party where it is sought to obtain a personal judgment against him,² as where the lien may have been declared invalid.³

It is sometimes provided that, although the contractor is a necessary party, the court may adjudicate the lien in case the sheriff shall return that he is unable to find the original contractor.⁴

After assignment of interest If the contractor has assigned his interest to the subcontractor the former is not a necessary party.⁵

Several general contractors Where the joinder of the principal contract is regarded as necessary, it has been held that, if there are several contractors by whom the subcontractor or materialman is employed, they should all be joined,⁶ although it has been held that a failure to make a prompt objection to the nonjoinder of one of the contractors waives the objection,⁷ and that, where there are several joined in the contract, one may be sued alone, and if the owner desires the other joint contractors to be made defendants the court may in its discretion have them brought in.⁸ It has been held that, where but one of two contractors was served, the court may by statutory permission render judgment against both, enforceable against the joint property of both and the separate property of the one served.⁹ Under a statute requiring the parties to the contract to be made parties, it has been held that, where several contractors jointly undertake the contract, they being jointly and severally liable, it is sufficient if either or only one of them is made a party defendant.¹⁰

h. Effect of Failure to Join Parties

A failure to join a proper party may be waived, but failure to join a necessary party may not.

If the issues between those who are present can be tried notwithstanding the absence of others who may not be concluded by the proceeding, or if the establishment of the lien does not depend on the presence of such omitted parties, the rule that an objection for a defect of parties will be waived if not made properly or in time has been applied.¹¹

Other objection

In proceedings by a subcontractor to enforce a mechanic's lien, fact that defendant contended that the contract was not his contract was not a waiver of the objection that the proper parties were not before the court—Godfrey Lumber Co v. Kline, 125 N W 682, 160 Mich 565.

However, where a necessary party has not been joined, his nonjoinder cannot be waived¹³ It has been held that the omission of a necessary party is fatal¹³ and warrants a dismissal of the proceeding,¹⁴ but it has been held that a court will not dismiss because of such defect unless it appears that a decree will have the effect of depriving the omitted party of his property rights or of unnecessarily burdening the owner with a multiplicity of suits¹⁵ It has been held that it is the duty of a complainant to see and know that he has before the court all necessary parties, or his decree will not be binding, and, where he takes a decree without making the necessary parties defendant to his bill and the necessity of their presence is disclosed, the decree will be reversed¹⁶

§ 285. Intervention, Addition, or Substitution of Parties

As a general rule the court may permit parties to be added or to intervene where their presence is necessary to a complete determination of all of the issues.

While the addition or substitution of parties rests largely on the law and practice of the forum in which the lien action is pending, generally the court has power in the equitable proceeding through which the lien is enforced, and, under the statutory provisions in that respect, to add other parties if their presence is necessary to a complete determination of the matters involved as between all persons interested¹⁷ For example, the general contractor may be brought in,¹⁸ a mortgagee may be brought in by a supplemental bill,¹⁹ and it has been held that the court of its own motion should order parties brought in who by the statute are made necessary parties to the proceeding²⁰ The assignee of the lienor's claim may be substituted as plaintiff²¹ So the statute may provide for the substitution of the representatives of a decedent²² or of a defendant for whom a guardian has been appointed²³

A party may be added as a defendant although the relief asked is in the alternative,²⁴ but plaintiff cannot bring in or the court add parties, unless plaintiff has a cause of action against defendant or some person originally made a defendant,²⁵ and if the matter has already been submitted, and the party is not a necessary party, the trial will not be opened.²⁶ Where the property against which the lien is sought to be enforced is destroyed by fire, the insurance company, it has been held, may be brought in as a party²⁷ Where the proceeding is in the nature of a proceeding in rem by a bill in equity on behalf of the complainant and all other lien claimants, in which all lien claimants must appear and file their claims, if any refuse so to appear the decree and sale thereunder will extinguish all mechanics' liens and there is no necessity to bring in such refusing party as a defendant²⁸ One who disputes the amount of his liability cannot have another substituted to bear the expense of the litigation²⁹

Intervention. Under the various statutory provisions persons having liens on the property or interests in the controversy or whose presence may be proper or necessary to a complete determination of the entire litigation ordinarily are permitted to come in and be made parties as though they had been originally joined³⁰ So one having an interest as an owner,³¹ or purchaser,³² or mortgagee,³³ or assignee of a mortgage,³⁴ or purchaser at a mortgage foreclosure,³⁵ or an original contractor who has assigned the notes given by the owner to complainant,³⁶ or other mechanics' lien claimants, whose rights and priorities should be settled,³⁷ may come in However, it has been held that, since the proceedings on a lien and the right of parties to intervene to protect their interests are regulated by statute, one seeking to intervene cannot do so where the statute does not authorize intervention or provide the manner therefor.³⁸

is not of a class for which he may be liable⁴⁰ Where, after institution of proceedings to foreclose a mechanic's lien, the lienor begins an action at law against the guarantors of the owner's contract and favorable judgments are rendered in both proceedings, the guarantors after payment of the judgment against them have no absolute right to intervene in the lien proceedings,⁴¹ and they will not be permitted to intervene where the judgment directs that from the proceeds of sale the amount of the liens of the single defendant lienors be first paid, then the amount of plaintiff's lien, less the sums so first directed to be paid and that the surplus, if any, be paid into court⁴²

Necessity for intervention In the absence of a statute so requiring, one lien claimant is not required to intervene in the proceeding of another claimant⁴³ notwithstanding he may have actual knowledge of its pendency⁴⁴ However, by force of statute in some jurisdictions other lien claimants are connected with the proceeding from the time the action is begun and notice is published, and the proceeding is one to enforce not only the lien of plaintiffs, but all recorded liens so that the holders of other liens are obliged to prove their claims therein or be held to have waived them⁴⁵ A statute providing that every creditor having a lien under a statute on the property may appear and prove his claim does not require other lienors to come in, but they may bring individual suits for the enforcement of their liens⁴⁶

be joined as parties in intervention has been held to preclude the making of such lienor a party by motion where he has not applied to be made a party.⁴⁷ A provision in a mechanics' lien law giving any person interested the right to intervene to contest the validity of the lien is not exclusive and does not preclude other lien creditors from contesting the validity of the lien in another court on distribution of the proceeds of a foreclosure sale in that court.⁴⁸ Where a record of a mortgage by reason of a mistake in the description of the property of the mortgage does not afford constructive notice, the mortgagee must set up his mortgage by intervention in a proceeding to foreclose a materialman's lien.⁴⁹

Joinder either as defendant or plaintiff Where the proceeding is in effect a suit in chancery, the general rule which obtains in courts of equity controls and all parties in interest should be before the court either as plaintiffs or defendants and they may be introduced in either capacity.⁵⁰

§ 286. Process in General

In the absence of waiver or appearance, service of process on the necessary parties is essential to the validity of a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien.

In the absence of a waiver or appearance,⁵¹ service of process or the giving of notice in the manner prescribed by law on the necessary parties is essential to the validity of a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien,⁵² and it is not sufficient merely to name one as a party in the pleadings in order to conclude him.⁵³ Actual or constructive notice must be given, although the proceeding is regarded as strictly in rem⁵⁴ or in the nature of a proceeding in rem.⁵⁵ Where, as far as disclosed by the record, certain persons are not necessary parties, it is immaterial whether process was served on them.⁵⁶

As against original contractor Where the contractor is a necessary party in a suit by a subcontractor in that the claim against him must be established before the lien can be enforced, he must be brought in by process if he does not appear,⁵⁷ although, as stated supra § 284 g, in some jurisdictions the court may proceed to adjudicate the lien where the contractor cannot be served, and it has been held that, where there is no objection on the ground of the absence of proof of service of process, the court is not precluded from rendering a decree as between the subcontractor and the owner.⁵⁸ Although under the statute a materialman seeking to enforce a lien must either obtain a judgment against the contractor or sue him concurrently with the owner, the owner of the premises after undertaking to bring the contractor before the court and procuring an order enjoining materialmen from instituting any suit looking to the foreclosure of their liens cannot object that the contractor is not personally served.⁵⁹ Where the contractor and owner are made parties defendant and the owner only is served, the contractor may be brought in, as in cases where only one of two defendants is served.⁶⁰

By defendant or intervening lienor. It has been held that, as the court has jurisdiction to determine all liens set up, a separate summons to the owner by each of the defendant lienors is not necessary,⁶¹ although service on the cross complaint on the parties affected by the allegations setting up the lien is required if a summons is not served,⁶² and it has been held that a personal judgment against the employer or owner is not authorized without service of summons on the cross petition, although he is bound to take notice of all claims asserted against the property by persons who are made parties under the original petition under a statute providing that all defendants having liens may set them up in their answers.⁶³ According to the practice in some jurisdictions, where a general contractor is made a party to a suit by a subcontractor, he is not bound by a decree entered on a petition filed by another subcontractor to enforce his lien in the same proceeding where he is not served with summons to answer such petition.⁶⁴

Sufficiency The character of process or notice in a proceeding to foreclose a mechanic's lien is sometimes fixed by the particular statutes with reference to the character of the parties or interests represented,⁶⁵ and express provisions in the statute conferring jurisdiction must be followed with respect to essential elements of form,⁶⁶ as well as in respect of the substance,⁶⁷ and the issue and service⁶⁸ of the summons, notice, or other process prescribed, although defects in the process or the service thereof may be waived by a general appearance.⁶⁹ Where the summons conforms to the express terms of the statute under which the lien is sought, it is sufficient.⁷⁰ Where the statute provides that the action shall proceed according to the chancery practice as far as it may be applicable, the summons is not objectionable because it refers to the petition as on the chancery side of the court, notwithstanding the cause is required to be placed on the common-law docket.⁷¹

Process running into another county. Since the proceeding is in rem or in the nature of a proceeding in rem, it has been held in some jurisdictions that personal service on defendant anywhere within the state is sufficient if the suit is instituted in the county where the property is located.⁷² So under a statute permitting process to be issued to a county other than the one in which suit is brought, where defendant residing in such other county can with propriety be joined as a codefendant if the owner resides and is served in the county where the property is situated and where the suit is brought, the summons may be issued to another county for the contractor,⁷³ but, where the pleading did not show on its face that materials were furnished under a contract with the owner which was necessary in order to show a lien under the particular statute, service on the contractor in another county was held insufficient to support a judgment against him for the amount of the claim, no judgment being recovered for the enforcement of the lien⁷⁴

Publication A personal judgment for the amount of the claim which will bind the general estate of a defendant must be supported by personal service⁷⁵ in the absence of an appearance,⁷⁶ but a constructive service is permitted, as by posting⁷⁷ or by publication⁷⁸ in proper cases, for the purpose of sustaining a judgment against the property, under particular statutes or under provisions relating generally to process appropriate to the remedies for the enforcement of mechanics' liens; but where the mechanics' lien law makes no provision for publication, and this method of service is not permitted except in special cases provided for by statute, an order of publication to bring in the owner is unauthorized⁷⁹ The provisions of a statute as to service by publication have been held to be mandatory, and there must be a compliance with the statutory requirements⁸⁰ Where plaintiff has obtained an order for service by publication and has made publication and proof thereof, a defendant lien claimant filing an answer seeking to enforce his lien is not required to sue out a new order of publication⁸¹ The issuance of summons against a contractor, as is required in case of resident defendants, is not required where it appears by affidavit filed with the clerk that he is a nonresident.⁸²

Under some statutes proceedings for enforcement of a mechanic's lien are initiated by attachment of the property against which the lien is claimed

Actual seizure or attachment of the property is not necessary in order to acquire jurisdiction in a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien,⁸³ and attachment is not a proper remedy⁸⁴ without a statute authorizing it, except for the causes enumerated in the general attachment laws⁸⁵ Further, it has been held that a proceeding by attachment is inconsistent with a proceeding to enforce a materialman's lien for the same property⁸⁶

Under some statutory provisions mechanics' liens are enforced by attachment followed by judgment and execution for the amount secured,⁸⁷ or by attachment based on a sworn bill or petition⁸⁸ or affi-

(1) Order of publication in suit to foreclose mechanic's lien was not necessary to secure service on unknown holders of notes secured by trust deed on property where service was had on all parties having an interest in the notes and trust deed as disclosed by the proper public records—Uhrig v Hill-Behan Lumber Co, 110 SW 2d 412, 341 Mo 851

(2) In materialman's lien proceeding, fact that summons against unknown owners was issued before filing of affidavit as to them did not invalidate service of process on unknown owners by publication—Alexander Lumber Co v Kellerman, 193 NE 913, 358 Ill 207.

Property in custody of court

(1) In an action to enforce a mechanic's lien where the property was in the custody of the court, because of an insolvency proceeding, it was not necessary that the attachment be actually levied in order that the lien be established—Nicely v Nicely, 8 Tenn App 134

(2) Attachment, granted and levied on petition of intervening mechanic's lien claimant, was sufficient to support enforcement of lien of original claimant, who filed bill, containing all essentials of petition, with bond and security, but did not sue out attachment—Reed v Fuller, 65 SW 2d 841, 16 Tenn App 47.

davit showing the necessary facts entitling the party to the relief,⁸⁹ and under such provisions the attachment must be issued and levied within the limitation period, and the mere commencement of a suit without such issue and levy of attachment is not sufficient⁹⁰ even though the attachment is issued and levied subsequently.⁹¹ Under a statute authorizing enforcement of mechanics' and furnishers' liens by attachment either at law or in equity, the attachment authorized cannot be used as the leading process to bring defendants before the court.⁹² Since the proceeding is statutory, the party resorting to it must allege in his affidavit the facts which entitle him to the relief under the statute,⁹³ but an affidavit which states the facts required by the statute in order to secure the lien and complies with the statute in other respects is sufficient,⁹⁴ and the grounds for attachment under the general attachment laws need not be set out,⁹⁵ and other requirements relating to attachments under the general attachment laws are not applicable⁹⁶ except as provided by the mechanics' lien statute.⁹⁷

§ 288. Scire Facias

While scire facias was known to the common law, its application to the enforcement of mechanics' liens is statutory,⁹⁸ and the statutes in some jurisdictions provide for the use of scire facias as a proceeding to enforce mechanics' liens.⁹⁹ Such statutes govern as to the form of the writ,¹ the mode of service,² and the defenses which may be made.³ The proceeding is regarded as in rem.⁴ It must be based on a subsisting lien⁵ and the ascertainment of the amount of the debt is incidental.⁶ Hence, it will not lie where the lien has been divested by a judicial sale.⁷

The scire facias notifies the party and gives him an opportunity to show cause against enforcing the lien⁸ and amounts to the institution of suit.⁹ The writ discloses the facts on which it is founded, it is in the nature of a declaration and the plea is properly directed to it,¹⁰ and it must be issued¹¹ and served¹² in strict compliance with the requirements of the statute.

Persons interested who are not notified as required by the statute cannot be prejudiced by any consent agreement between the mechanic filing the lien and the parties against whom the writ issues by which notice is waived¹³ Under a statute providing for two writs of scire facias, one to recover and the other to continue the lien, the scire facias to continue the lien may issue pending a scire facias to recover¹⁴

§ 289. Notice of Pendency of Action

Mechanic's lien statutes sometimes require the filing of notice of lis pendens and some general lis pendens statutes have been held to apply to proceedings to enforce mechanic's liens

It has been held that, where the requirements of the mechanics' lien statute are complied with, all persons dealing with the property must take notice of the mechanic's lien although no lis pendens notice is filed,¹⁵ and in the absence of a statutory requirement a notice of the pendency of the action need not be filed in order to hold the property as against purchasers pendente lite,¹⁶ nor in the absence of statutory requirement is the owner bound to notify assignees of the contractor of the institution of a lien suit by a subcontractor¹⁷ However, a statute of general application requiring notice of lis pendens in actions affecting the title to real estate has been held to be applicable to mechanics' liens,¹⁸ and, where lis pendens is not filed, the lien is ineffective as against a bona fide purchaser or mortgagee¹⁹ although the notice of lis pendens is not essential to the protection of the lien as against a purchaser taking with actual knowledge of the claim²⁰

Under some mechanic's lien statutes the lienor is required to file or serve a notice of lis pendens²¹ Under some statutes the lien is lost unless the lis pendens is filed within the time prescribed,²² although the debt may be enforced,²³ and, where the lien on the property is discharged by depositing the money in court and the lien is shifted to the fund, the filing of a lis pendens is unnecessary²⁴ On the other hand, it has been held that the purpose of requiring lis pendens is to give constructive notice²⁵ and that a failure in that respect may not be availed of by persons who have actual notice²⁶ Thus a notice of lis pendens is not a condition to the enforcement of the lien as against the owner²⁷ So, where the lien claimant is required at the time of filing the complaint and issuing summons to publish a notice of his claim for a certain time in a newspaper notifying all persons holding or claiming liens

on the premises to appear and exhibit them,²⁸ it has been held that the failure to publish such a notice does not defeat claimant's right of action where it does not appear that there are any other liens, as in such case defendant is not prejudiced.²⁹ The requirement is intended for the protection of third persons who may deal with the property without notice.³⁰

Lienors made defendant Where other lienholders have been made defendants and a notice of lis pendens has been filed, it has been held that they need not file further notice of lis pendens,³¹ although it has also been held that a lienholder setting up his lien by way of cross bill must also file his notice of lis pendens,³² and that, where the notice is required to contain the names of the parties, one whose lien subsequently matures must amend a lis pendens already filed by plaintiff so as to include his name therein as a party or serve a lis pendens on his own behalf.³³

quired to file a lis pendens³⁴ unless the lis pendens already filed by the other parties lists him as a person affected by the proceeding.³⁵

Cancellation or vacation of notice Under a statute providing for the cancellation of a notice of lis pendens after settlement, discontinuance, abatement, or final judgment in an action, a notice of lis pendens should be canceled where the lien is discharged by failure to begin the action to foreclose within the time prescribed by statute.³⁶

§ 290. Dismissal before Hearing

General grounds for dismissal, such as want of prosecution, apply to proceedings to enforce a mechanic's lien.

The courts have a general control over lien actions pending therein and may direct their discontinuance on grounds applicable to the dismissal of other actions.³⁷ For example, the proceeding may be dismissed because of a want of diligent prosecution,³⁸ or the proceeding may be dismissed be-

Special demurrer

A motion to dismiss materialman's lien action because of unnecessary delay was in nature of a special demurrer and was a proper method of calling to court's attention the long delay in prosecution of the case—Wiles-Chipman Lumber Co v Pieper, Mo App, 176 SW 2d 50

Trial court of own motion and without notice may dismiss action to foreclose mechanic's lien not pros-

cause it was not brought in time,³⁹ or because of failure to show reasonable diligence as to service of summons,⁴⁰ or a failure to serve necessary parties,⁴¹ or for failure to serve a notice of lien in time, or because of insufficient notice.⁴² If a personal judgment can be recovered in the lien proceeding the waiver of the lien is no ground for dismissal of the complaint.⁴³

The motion to dismiss may be made by one who is the legal or equitable owner of the property⁴⁴ or by other lien claimants,⁴⁵ but an action to enforce a lien which is apparently regular on its face cannot be dismissed on motion of a person who is not a party and who does not seek to be made a party with the result of summarily disposing of an issue regularly made between plaintiff and one defendant, the other defendant being in default.⁴⁶

Time for motion A motion by complainant to dismiss his bill without prejudice is properly denied where made after the cause has been heard on the pleadings and the master's report of the evidence, and it is apparent to claimant that the decree will necessarily be against him,⁴⁷ but, where the answer merely affects the validity of the lien and there is no affirmative relief demanded, the case may be dismissed on plaintiff's application after the trial has begun and part of plaintiff's evidence has been introduced.⁴⁸

Affirmative claims by defendants Where the statute contemplates a disposition of the entire matter of liens in one proceeding, and other lien claimants are made defendants and appear, the original plaintiff by dismissal of his proceedings

cannot preclude an adjudication of the rights of the other lienors,⁴⁹ nor does the fact that the original complainant fails to sustain his lien affect the right of defendant and other lien claimants to enforce their liens in that proceeding.⁵⁰ A proceeding by the owner who has filed a petition for a general settlement will not be dismissed on the owner's motion after the time has elapsed within which a defendant lienor might have asserted his claim for a lien in another proceeding,⁵¹ and this is true although the answer of the lienor when filed contained a prayer that the petition be dismissed.⁵² After complainant has become a nominal party by an assignment to a defendant who by answer and cross bill has asserted his claim, his motion to dismiss is properly denied.⁵³ It has been held that a cross bill to quiet title survives a dismissal of the lien claim.⁵⁴

Effect A nonsuit taken on a scire facias does not destroy the claim or its lien⁵⁵ nor does it bar a subsequent action on the debt.⁵⁶ Where the proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien is brought against joint owners if the bill is properly dismissed on a demurrer of one of the alleged owners the proceeding is at an end regardless of any defect in the petition of codefendant seeking permission to come in and answer after a default.⁵⁷ Where, in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien, tried by the court without a jury, the evidence as to whether a certain sum paid to the contractor was in full of the contract price was conflicting, and the court dismissed the complaint, such judgment was equivalent to a finding that the sum paid was all plaintiff was entitled to under the contract, and hence a dismissal executed to trial within two years—Hayward Lumber & Investment Co v Greenwalt, 12 P 2d 445, 215 Cal 655

Mere delay will not in itself forfeit right to mechanic's lien, and only unnecessary delay is prohibited by statute, such delay must be established by evidence to be a fact and the lapse of ten years between date of instituting suit to enforce mechanics' lien and rendition of final decree did not require dismissal of the suit, where there was procrastination by all parties but no proof of unnecessary delay by claimants and party opposing enforcement of lien did not attempt to exercise statutory right to hasten movement of the case—*Fuhler v Gohman & Levine Const. al on the merits, and not a nonsuit merely ⁵⁸

Reinstatement Where an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien is dismissed without prejudice, a reinstatement at the same term is within the discretion of the court,⁵⁹ and the discretion of the court in allowing such reinstatement will not be interfered with where the grounds alleged against reinstatement go only to the merits of the case and to the right of plaintiff to maintain the action ⁶⁰

§ 291. Receiver

Under general equity powers or statutory authorization the court may appoint a receiver of the property against which the mechanic's lien is sought to be enforced

In the absence of statutory authority or equitable considerations, a mechanic's lienor is not entitled to the appointment of a receiver of the property pendente lite,⁶¹ but under general statutes authorizing the appointment of a receiver, or under its general equity powers, a court may appoint a receiver for the purpose of conserving the property pending the action ⁶² Statutes authorizing or governing the appointment of receivers in mortgage foreclosure actions are sometimes held to apply to proceedings to enforce a mechanic's lien ⁶³

The appointment of a receiver rests largely in the discretion of the court,⁶⁴ but it has been held that a receiver should be appointed only under circumstances requiring summary relief or where the court is satisfied that there is imminent danger of loss and where there is no remedy at law,⁶⁵ or where the debtor is insolvent and that the property on which the lien is sought to be enforced is meager and scant security for the debt ⁶⁶ The burden is on the lien claimant to make a strong showing of equities entitling him to the appointment of a receiver ⁶⁷

Appointment and order Where the statute authorizes the appointment of a receiver, where a sale has been had and confirmation thereof has been denied, to lease or otherwise handle the property in the interests of all concerned, a receiver may be properly appointed with such powers, although the moving papers ask for relief which the statute does not authorize ⁶⁸ An order appointing a receiver is not fatally defective because of a slight variance in the description of the property of which it requires the receiver to take possession from the description contained in the lien notice ⁶⁹

Receiver's powers The court may authorize the receiver to borrow money to complete the improvement⁷⁰ and to remove from the property an im-

Estoppel

In mechanic's lien foreclosure proceeding, owners could not challenge order authorizing receiver to borrow money to complete building, where owners were in court and consented

provement which lessened its value.⁷¹ The receiver's certificate may be made a first lien,⁷² although this power will be exercised in cases of individuals and private corporations with great caution.⁷³

Establishment of claims It has been held that, where a receiver is appointed, the mode of establishing lien claims by suit or presentation to the receiver rests within the discretion of the court.⁷⁴

Disposition of funds A court in possession of rents collected by a receiver may make such application thereof as justice and equity require.⁷⁵

B. PLEADING

§ 292. Declaration, Bill, Complaint, or Petition

The nature of the pleadings required to enforce a mechanic's lien depends on the nature of the proceeding and the terms of the statutes.

The nature of the pleadings required to enforce a mechanic's lien depends on the nature of the proceeding and the terms of the statutes.⁷⁶ Thus, where the statute requires an adjudication of all recorded claims in one action, it is sometimes held that formal pleadings on the part of claimants who may come into the proceeding and prove their liens are not necessary.⁷⁷ It is a matter for the sound discretion of the court whether, under the circumstances of the case, it shall grant leave to file a complaint nunc pro tunc.⁷⁸

scire facias, no declaration is necessary.

§ 293. — Form, Requisites, and Sufficiency in General

The facts on which a mechanic's lien arises and which authorize its enforcement under the statute must be alleged, and a pleading which does this is sufficient.

The rules governing plaintiffs' pleadings in civil actions generally, as considered in the CJS title Pleading §§ 63-98, also 49 C.J. p 128 note 29-p 179 note 56, generally apply to plaintiff's pleadings in an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien.⁷⁹ The right to a mechanic's lien, being entirely dependent on statute, the facts on which such lien arises and which authorize its enforcement under the statute must be alleged,⁸⁰ and the pleading which does this is sufficient,⁸¹ at least if it conforms in other re-

spects to the general rules governing the sufficiency of pleading in a particular forum⁸² Aside from this, it has been said that there is no peculiar rule of pleading which is especially and only applicable to petitions for the enforcement of mechanics' liens⁸³ Matters which cannot affect the lienor's right to a lien need not be alleged⁸⁴

While it has been held that plaintiff's bill should show that the suit was begun before the statutory period of limitation expired,⁸⁵ where the record shows that the suit was instituted in time the bill need not allege the fact affirmatively, since the court will take notice of the record⁸⁶

rors are immaterial in determining the sufficiency of the pleading⁸⁸

Construction The pleadings in a mechanics' lien case should be liberally construed,⁸⁹ and all parts of the pleading should be read together⁹⁰ Where lien actions have been consolidated for trial, the allegations of the various complaints may be taken together and treated as one pleading, the allegations in one complaint remedying the defects or omissions in another⁹¹

Proceeding by assignee Where the suit is brought by the assignee of the lien, the pleading must show when and how plaintiff acquired title to the lien⁹² Under a statute providing that the lien claimant may assign his claim in writing, it is not necessary in a proceeding by the assignee to allege

a. Description of Premises and Improvements

Claimant's pleading should describe the premises to be subjected to his lien and the building or improvement for which material was furnished

Claimant's pleading should describe the premises which he seeks to subject to his lien,⁹⁶ and, where the statute limits a particular lien to a prescribed amount of land, the description in the pleading should conform thereto,⁹⁷ and, where claimant seeks an enlargement of the statutory quantity of land, he should by averment and proof advance facts in support of his demand.⁹⁸ However, while it is said that a building or improvement for which the material was furnished should be described also,⁹⁹ a complaint is not bad which does not state the nature of the alterations or repairs made,¹ or which does not allege specifically what was constructed,² unless a description of an improvement may be necessary under the provisions of the statute in order to show the right to a lien³

Sufficiency in general The description of the premises must be sufficient to identify the property on which the lien attaches,⁴ and must be sufficiently accurate to enable the court to decree the

Contiguous or adjacent city lots

Allegation of bill to enforce materialman's lien that property improved was specified city lots, which were "contiguous" or "adjacent," was held sufficient, under statute permitting one lien to cover "contiguous" or "adjacent" city lots—Grimsley v First Ave Coal & Lumber Co, 115 So 90, 217 Ala 159

Location within or outside of town

(1) A bill to enforce materialman's lien, which was equivocal as to the question whether realty improved

was located within town or outside thereof, and as to whether there was a single entire contract, was demurrable, since if realty was within town and work and labor were covered by single contract statutory lien attached to lots covered by the building, and if lands were not within corporate limits of town lien was limited to one acre—Polakow v General Roofing & Supply Co, 7 So 2d 73, 24 Ala 497

(3) While pleading in materialman's lien action should expressly aver that lots are in city, town, or village, when lien is claimed on them as such, overruling demurrer to pleading containing no such averment was held not reversible error, where description reasonably imported city or town lots, with street numbers, and fully identified property—City Realty & Mortgage Co v Tallapoosa Lumber Co, 164 So 55, 231 Ala 338

sale and the purchaser to find the land.⁵ It is sufficient if the description points out and indicates the premises so that by applying the description to the land it can be found and identified,⁶ and the same rule has been applied to the description of the building or improvement because of which the lien is sought to be enforced.⁷ Where the statute provides that the land subject to the lien is that on which the building is constructed, together with a sufficient space about it required for the convenient use and occupation thereof, to be determined by the court on rendering judgment, the amount of land so required need not be pleaded, since it is the duty of the court to make a finding of such fact,⁸ but it has also been held that, if the lien is claimed on more than that occupied by the building for its convenient use, the allegations of the complaint must embrace such claim.⁹

Reference to claim of lien or other exhibit. Sometimes the pleading may be rendered sufficiently certain in respect of the description of the property by reference to the claim of lien filed which contains a sufficient description,¹⁰ or other instrument attached as an exhibit to the pleading.¹¹ On the other hand, it has been held that a reference to the notice or claim of lien, although the claim is annexed to the complaint, will not supply a defect in the description.¹²

Immaterial mistake. The use of a term in the description of land which the context shows was a mere mistake will not vitiate the description if the substitution of the proper term will complete it.¹³ So, if the property is described by particulars which, in a deed, would be sufficient to pass the title, the addition of other descriptive matter which is incorrect will not invalidate the complaint or render an amendment necessary.¹⁴ The fact that the lien is claimed on more land than it can lawfully apply to will not vitiate it in its application to as much of the land described as it may properly apply to in the absence of fraud or injury to the owner or some third person,¹⁵ but, where the statute confines the particular lien to a specific amount of land, a description of a larger tract will not justify an enforcement of a lien on any part of the tract so described without evidence to locate the lien on such part.¹⁶ If the lot is sufficiently described to identify it, the lien will not be defeated merely because the lot is of greater area than that designated in the description.¹⁷ Where claimant is entitled to enforce his lien against buildings only, the sufficiency of the description of the land becomes immaterial.¹⁸

b. Ownership or Interest

Claimant's pleading must allege who is the owner of the property or interest to be affected, and must allege that defendant has an adverse interest in the premises or the controversy.

Claimant's pleading must allege who is the owner of the property or the interest therein to be affected,¹⁹ and it must be alleged that the person who

(1) Allegation in complaint in mechanic's lien foreclosure suit that defendant was owner of property was held sufficient, as equivalent to allegation of ownership in fee simple—Zasucha v. Allen, 51 P 2d 1029, 56 Nev 339

(2) Petition alleging that defendants named were owners of leasehold interest in property described, that, being owners thereof, they entered into contract with plaintiff for purchase of building material, and that plaintiff furnished material by virtue of such contract, stated a is made defendant has some interest in the premises or in the controversy adverse to the complainant²⁰

c. Services or Materials Furnished and Purpose Thereof

In an action to enforce a mechanic's lien, claimant's pleading must show that the liability sought to be enforced is for labor or material furnished, and should describe such labor or material. The purpose for which material was furnished, and the use of such material, may also be required to be alleged.

In an action to enforce a mechanic's lien, claimant's pleading should clearly show that the liability sought to be enforced is for labor or material furnished.²¹ The pleading should describe the labor performed or material furnished so that from the allegation it may be ascertained whether the work or material is of the sort which entitles claimant to a lien,²² and, if a lien is sought for extra work, it should be shown by plaintiff's allegations of what such extra work consisted.²³ However, where there is no difficulty in ascertaining with certainty the nature of the claims on which plaintiff is to recover and for which he is to have a lien, the complaint is sufficient.²⁴

Use in particular building Plaintiff's pleading must show by proper allegations that the materials for which the lien is claimed were furnished to be used in the construction of the building on which the lien is claimed,²⁵ and it is not sufficient to state that such materials actually entered into and because of action under statute authorizing lien in case of leased property, notwithstanding ambiguous averment that defendants owned or had some interest in property—Miners Lumber Co v Miller, Mo App, 117 S W 2d 711

(3) The allegation in bill to foreclose a materialman's lien against husband and wife that they were record title owners of the property, showed that property was held by them as an estate by the entireties—Rieck & Fleece v Cunniff, 190 So 8, 138 Fla 742

Allegations held insufficient

(1) Defendant's ownership must be clearly alleged, and interlineation of word "owner" following defendant's name in prayer is not sufficient—Babat Co v Julian, 3 La App 351

(2) Where mechanics' liens were filed jointly against corporate and individual buyers of supplies as owners of property, and it was not averred that corporation leased property or that property was operated by a lessee, the seller was not entitled to a lien on corporation's property on account of articles sold a lessee—Home Lumber & Coal Co v Hartford Mining Co, 81 P 2d 1063, 58 Nev. 361, rehearing 83 P 2d 1049, 58 Nev 361

Joint interest

Bill to enforce a materialman's lien was held to show a joint interest of defendants as to the materials furnished and used in the improvements, the contract being executed by their co-operation for one of them who was the owner of the property—Fowler v Mackentepe, 173 So 266, 233 Ala 458

Validity or priority of mortgage

If plaintiff, in an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien, desires to challenge the validity of a prior recorded, unmaturing mortgage, or the right of mortgagee therein to a superior lien, it is incumbent on such plaintiff to allege facts from which it would appear that the mortgage was invalid or that it would be inequitable for such mortgagee's lien to be made superior to the plaintiff's lien—Burns v Sholl, 197 N W 393, 111 Neb 628

ame a part of the building²⁶ On the other hand, under some provisions the complaint must show not only the purpose for which the material was furnished but also that it was used in the construction of the particular building²⁷ At least this is so in a suit by a materialman furnishing materials to a contractor,²⁸ although, where the contract is with the owner, the averment of actual use in the building has been held not to be required²⁹ If the fact that materials were furnished to be used in the particular building can be inferred from the allegations as made in the pleading, it will be sufficient, notwithstanding more certainty could be required on a motion for that purpose³⁰

d. Contract with, or Consent of, Owner

- (1) Necessity of allegation
- (2) Sufficiency of allegation

(1) Necessity of Allegation

Claimant's pleading must show that the work was done or the material was furnished in pursuance of a contract with the owner of the property or with his consent

Since, in order to support a mechanic's lien, the work must have been done or the materials furnished in pursuance of a contract with the owner of the property or interest sought to be charged or with his consent, as discussed supra §§ 52-55 it is essential that such fact shall appear from the pleadings of claimant seeking to enforce a lien.³¹ Hence, plaintiff's pleading should allege the contract under which a lien is claimed³² So, where it is sought to foreclose a lien for improvements or repairs made by a stranger to the title, it must at least allege knowledge on the part of the owner,³³ unless the lack of such allegation is cured by the owner's complaint in intervention³⁴ It has been held that, in an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien, the complaint need not allege a promise to pay in order to state a cause of action in the form of a common count for work, labor, and materials³⁵

Property of married woman Where it is sought to charge the property of a married woman, there must be some averment of a contract or agreement with her,³⁶ or contractual liability based on the acts of the husband as her agent whose acts she authorized, or ratified, or is estopped to repudiate³⁷ It has been held that a bill to enforce a lien against an estate by the entireties must allege the knowledge or assent of the husband and wife or a written contract with them³⁸

(2) Sufficiency of Allegation

- (a) In general
- (b) Actions by materialmen or subcontractors

(a) In General

In a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, where, under a fair interpretation of its language, claimant's pleading alleges the agreement or consent of the owner, it is sufficient.

Where, under a fair interpretation of its language, claimant's pleading alleges the agreement or consent of the owner, it is in general sufficient³⁹ However, the pleading should not leave such aver-

ment to inference⁴⁰ A mere allegation that repairs were made and materials furnished with the knowledge and consent of defendant is not sufficient without other allegations,⁴¹ although, where under the statute it is sufficient if the work was done with the consent of the owner, it is not necessary to show whether the work was performed under a written or other special contract⁴² A complaint which alleges a contract to do particular work and the performance of the contract by plaintiff is sufficiently specific⁴³

A special contract must be averred and full performance alleged in order to render a more specific statement of claim unnecessary,⁴⁴ and, under particular statutes, it has been held that the petition or complaint must contain a statement of the contract,⁴⁵ or that the contract must be set out in the pleading,⁴⁶ and that, where the statute makes restrictions as to the character of the contract under which the lien can attach, a general allegation of the contract is insufficient, the terms of the contract must be set up to show the right to the lien⁴⁷ The terms are sufficiently set up when they are alleged as fully as the contract itself permits,⁴⁸ and the petition need not show facts relating to the contract which under the particular statutes are not essential to support the lien⁴⁹ Mere uncertainty in the allegation must be reached by a motion to make more definite and certain where a demurrer does not raise such objection,⁵⁰ although under the practice in some jurisdictions the objection may be raised by demurrer⁵¹ Under a statute containing such requirement, the pleading must contain an allegation to the effect that the materials were furnished under one continuous contract⁵²

Joint contract Allegations in the petition that the materials are furnished at the instance and request of two persons do not necessarily amount to an allegation of a joint contract,⁵³ and an allegation that one assisted and advised the owner in the construction of a building has been held not to allege a joint adventure by such person with the owner⁵⁴ In order to enforce a lien on several lots in one suit, it is necessary to aver that the material was furnished and went therein under one contract⁵⁵ An allegation that labor or material was furnished on two lots under a joint contract with the persons owning the several lots is a sufficient

Original or subcontract An allegation that defendant entered into a contract with plaintiff whereby plaintiff agreed to employ him to perform work and furnish material sufficiently alleges that he was an original contractor ⁵⁷

Contract by lessee. Where enforcement of a lien against a lessor is sought on the basis of labor and material furnished to the lessee, the complaint should aver the authority of the lessee to make improvements and repairs, ⁵⁸ and should aver facts putting the lessor on notice ⁵⁹

Contracts by agents Where the contract is relied on as having been made by an agent, the agency must be alleged as in other cases, ⁶⁰ and, while the authority of the agent need not be alleged, ⁶¹ the name of the agent should be stated ⁶² A complaint against two defendants showing that in making the contract one was acting as the agent for the other should be dismissed as to the alleged agent in the absence of an allegation that plaintiff extended credit to him and that he agreed individually to pay for the material furnished ⁶³ Although the contract does not mention the name of the true

owner but refers to the alleged agent as the owner of the premises, there is a sufficient allegation that the person designated as the true owner made the contract where it alleges that in making the contract he acted through a designated person as agent ⁶⁴

Incorporation or reference to lien statement The allegations of the pleading as to a contract may be aided by reference to, and incorporation of, the statement or claim for a lien, ⁶⁵ and, where the allegation of the contract varies from the contract shown in a lien claim made a part of the complaint, the complaint may be rendered bad for uncertainty, ⁶⁶ but an immaterial variance between the complaint and lien claim and the contract itself, as to the character of the work covered by the contract, by which variance no one could be misled or injured, is not fatal ⁶⁷

and an allegation that the contract was oral is sufficient where a statute expressly authorizes oral contracts as bases for mechanics' liens.⁷⁰ Where there has been a written contract for particular work and alleged verbal orders for changes or extras, the fact that the contract was in writing should be set forth and the claim for extras under the subsequent verbal agreements or orders should be set out separately.⁷¹ However, it has been held to be immaterial that modifications were described as written instead of oral.⁷²

(b) Actions by Materialmen or Subcontractors

In general, the complaint of a laborer or materialman should show that the material or labor was furnished at the instance of the owner or someone properly acting for him; and a subcontractor's pleading should show that the work was done under a contract between the principal contractor and the owner.

In a proceeding by a laborer or materialman, the complaint must set out that the materials or labor for which the lien is claimed were furnished either at the instance of the owner or owner's agent or some person bearing the statutory relationship to the owner.⁷³ Where the statute confers a lien for work done at the instance of the owner or of his agent and provides that every contractor, subcontractor, or other person having charge of construction shall be held to be the agent of the owner, it is not material whether the agency of the person employing claimant was a principal contractor or subcontractor, and, hence, his relationship with the owner at the various times during which the labor was performed need not be alleged.⁷⁴

It has been held sufficient that a subcontractor allege that the work was done under a contract between the principal contractor and the owner without alleging a request by the owner,⁷⁵ and also that it is unnecessary to allege in direct terms that materials were furnished or work performed under a contract with the contractor, and that it is enough if the facts alleged show the contract.⁷⁶ Under some statutes, a subcontractor should aver and show that by the terms of his contract with the principal contractor he is within the terms of the principal contract,⁷⁷ and the terms of the contract between the original contractor and the owner must be so alleged that it may be seen from the facts set forth in the complaint that some amount was due from the owner to the contractor where that is necessary to support the claim of a subcontractor,⁷⁸ although on the other hand it is held that, under a provision that the lien shall not be enforced for an amount in excess of the original contract price, it is a matter of defense if the claim is greater than the contract price and the original contract price need not be alleged by the subcontractor.⁷⁹

Statutory contract with owner Where, under the statute, a difference exists in cases in which the work was done under a valid statutory contract and those in which it was not, the lien claimant must show by his pleadings under which theory he claims,⁸⁰ but it has been held that plaintiff may allege the actual facts as one cause of action,⁸¹ and, where the statute provides that, when the contract is void for any of the reasons enumerated in the statute, materials shall be deemed to have been furnished at the special request of the owner, a materialman may plead that the goods were sold at the special request of the owner and need not plead the construction and validity of the contract.⁸² Where the statute requires that the contract between the owner and the contractor to whom material is furnished must be in writing, the fact that it is in writing must be alleged.⁸³ Where the written consent of the record owner of real estate in possession of a purchaser under an executory contract is required, such consent, or a copy thereof, must be attached to the petition to foreclose a materialman's lien.⁸⁴

e. Time of Furnishing Work or Material

Claimant's pleading should show when the labor was performed or the material furnished, but it is sufficient if from the facts alleged such time may be fairly inferred

Since, under various statutory provisions the fixing of a lien depends on the filing of a statement of claim within a prescribed period after the labor is performed or the material furnished, as discussed supra §§ 139-144, or the right to enforce such lien depends on the commencement of proceedings within a time limited after the labor is performed and the materials furnished or after the filing of the lien claim, as considered supra § 282, in order to show a valid lien or a present right to enforce it plaintiff's pleading should show when the labor was performed or the material furnished,⁸⁵ but the pleading will be sufficient if from the facts alleged such time may be fairly inferred, as where it is alleged that materials were furnished between specified dates⁸⁶ If one item is shown to have been furnished within the time prescribed by the statute, the complaint will be good at least as to that item.⁸⁷

Under the rule that the alienation of the property before any labor was performed or material furnished defeats the right to subject the property in the hands of the purchaser for such labor or materials as were furnished after such alienation, the complaint must show the commencement of the work or the furnishing of the materials before the alienation⁸⁸

f. Completion of Work or Performance of Contract

In a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, claimant's pleading must allege performance of the contract or set up an excuse for failure to perform

The pleading for the enforcement of a mechanic's lien for work and materials furnished under a contract must allege the performance of the contract,⁸⁹ or set up a sufficient legal excuse for failure to perform⁹⁰ This is essential where the obligation to pay does not mature until the contract has been performed,⁹¹ and so, where the time for the completion of the work or performance of the contract is material as furnishing the point from which the limitation period for perfecting the lien or commencing suit to enforce it begins to run, it must be alleged⁹² It has been held, however, that an allegation that the work was completed in accordance with the contract sufficiently alleges performance⁹³ In an action to foreclose a contract lien, plaintiff's failure to plead and prove a compliance with the contract will not render a judgment of foreclosure

Statement as to payment of subcontractors and employees

A contractor's suit to foreclose mechanic's lien was properly dismissed for failure to allege that contractor had given owner a sworn statement as required by statute regarding full payment of subcontractors and contractor's employees or names and amounts due those not so paid—Fred Howland, Inc, v Gore, 13 So 2d 303, 152 Fla 781

(1) Complaint alleging that sole ground on which owner refused to pay was that a marquee was defective was not generally demurrable on ground that it was admitted that the marquee was defective where it was apparent from whole complaint that defendants contended that marquee was defective and not that such was actual fact—Lidral Const Co v Parker, 113 P 2d 1032, 9 Wash 2d 128

(2) The fact that plaintiffs in bill and in statement of account filed with registry of deeds alleged performance of written contract, except for items eliminated by oral modification, was held not improper, even though certain parts of work specified in written contract had been done by different mode of performance under oral agreement—Lampson v Capriotti, 4 NE 2d 621, 296 Mass 34, 108 A L R 430.

Where the subcontractor's lien depends on the fact, he must aver that the work or materials were such as come within the terms of the original contract between the owner and the original contractor,⁹⁵ but it is otherwise when the right does not depend on such fact,⁹⁶ and it is not necessary to allege that the contractor had completed his contract where plaintiff states all that is necessary to show his right prima facie under the statute.⁹⁷

Architect's certificate Where, by the terms of the contract, the obtaining and presentation of an architect's certificate is a condition precedent to the maturing of the final payment, it has been held that the complaint must state that such certificate was given or demanded, and, if refused, the reasons why it should have been given, or, if waived, a statement of the facts,⁹⁸ although there is also authority to the contrary.⁹⁹

g. Amount and Maturity of Indebtedness

- (1) In general
- (2) Actions by materialmen or subcontractors

(1) In General

Claimant's pleading should show the amount or value of services or material furnished, the amount due, and the fact that it is payable.

Plaintiff's pleading should show the amount or value of the services performed or materials furnished,¹ and the amount that is due,² as well as that it is payable.³ An allegation of demand for payment is not necessary.⁴

Nonpayment Since nonpayment of plaintiff's claim is of the gist of the action to enforce a mechanic's lien, nonpayment must be alleged,⁵ and, under the general rule that an exhibit cannot be referred to for the purpose of supplying the omission of a material allegation, a statement in the notice of lien filed as an exhibit with the complaint and made a part of it cannot supply the omission.⁶

Apportionment Where several houses are built on different lots under a single contract, a materialman need not specify the amount of material used in each of the houses.⁷

Unrecorded contract Where work is done or materials furnished under a written contract which is void because not recorded as required by statute, the complaint must allege the value of the material or of the work,⁸ and an allegation of the agreed price under such a contract may be sufficient in the absence of a proper objection on the ground of uncertainty, although it is an allegation of prima facie evidence of value and not of the ultimate facts.⁹

Penalties. Where claimant seeks to include in the amount protected by the lien the amount of a penalty provided by statute for nonpayment of wages, the complaint must contain a clear statement of such intention.¹⁰

(2) Actions by Materialmen or Subcontractors

The question whether, in an action by a subcontractor or materialman to enforce a lien, it is necessary to allege the indebtedness of the owner to the principal contractor or of the principal contractor to the subcon-

Complaint held sufficient

Complaint alleging that there was due lien claimant certain amount as penalty in addition to amount due for labor performed and material furnished was held sufficiently to show intention to exact penalty prescribed by statute.—Milner v. Shuey, supra.

tractor depends on the provisions of the statutes and the facts of the particular case.

Where, under the statute, the right of a subcontractor or materialman to a lien depends on the liability of the owner to the contractor for some amount under the original contract at the time of the filing of the lien, or the bringing of the suit, or the service of notice on the owner, a subcontractor or materialman is required to allege in his pleading that the owner was indebted to the principal contractor under the terms of the contract between those parties at the time contemplated by the statutory provision,¹¹ or set up some fact which would entitle the petitioner to the lien, such as a premature payment by the owner to the contractor.¹² This rule is not universal but is denied in a number of cases which hold that plaintiff need not allege more than what the statute requires him to do in order to acquire a prima facie right to a lien and that, although payment by the owner to the original contractor may under particular circumstances defeat the subcontractor, this is purely a matter of defense.¹³

Some of the cases in announcing the general rule use language which implies that it is necessary to state the amount which is due the original contractor,¹⁴ but it has been held otherwise where the point was directly involved,¹⁵ and the allegation of indebtedness will be sufficient which shows that there is sufficient to meet the lienor's claim.¹⁶ Moreover, the entire failure to allege an indebtedness from the owner to the contractor will be cured by an admission of an indebtedness by the owner in his answer,¹⁷ or by the introduction of evidence at the trial, since the pleadings will be deemed amended to conform to the proof.¹⁸

Contract price Where the lien of a materialman is limited to the contract price, as discussed supra § 174, in a proceeding by him it should be alleged that the price was equal to, or greater than, the amount of the lien which it is sought to enforce.¹⁹

Primary liability of owner An allegation of indebtedness from the owner to the principal contractor is not necessary where the owner has made himself responsible directly to plaintiff for the amount of his claim.²⁰ So, where a primary liability on the part of the owner is alleged, it is not necessary to allege an indebtedness to the contractor.²¹

Unrecorded contract Where, under the statute, the building contract is void because not recorded as required by the statute and the material is for that reason deemed to have been furnished at the instance of the owner, it is not necessary to allege that at the time of the filing of the notice of lien any sum was due from the owner to the contractor.²²

Failure to file bond Where, under the statute, the lien claimant is entitled to foreclose his lien on the land of the owner irrespective of the amount due from the owner to the contractor, if the owner has not filed the contractor's bond as provided by the statute, the lien claimant, in order to be entitled to foreclose irrespective of the amount due from the owner to the contractor, must allege that the terms of the statute as to such bond have not been met.²³

Owner's duty to retain part of contract price Where, under the statute, the owner is required to withhold a specified portion of the contract price for the purpose of meeting claims of materialmen and others, as provided by the statute, a materialman is not required to allege that anything is due from the owner to the contractor,²⁴ or from the contractor to the subcontractor to whom he furnished materials,²⁵ and a materialman who alleges that such portion of the contract price is due from the owner to the contractor need not allege that anything was owing to plaintiff by the owner ²⁶

Contractor's indebtedness to subcontractor Except in so far as the rule may be affected by the owner's statutory duty to retain part of the contract price, it has been held that a laborer's claim which fails to allege that any sum is due or remains unpaid from the contractor to the subcontractor is fatally defective ²⁷ In an action by subcontractors to which they have joined the contractor as a plaintiff, an allegation that certain amounts specified are due from the owner to plaintiffs other than the contractor is sufficient without an allegation that such amounts have not been paid by the contractor ²⁸

Judgment against contractor In those jurisdictions in which a materialman seeking to enforce his lien against the owner must first have secured a judgment against the contractor or join him as a party defendant, a materialman in an action against the owner alone must allege that he has a judgment against the contractor ²⁹

h. Itemized Account or Bill of Particulars

Except where required by statute, an itemized account or bill of particulars need not be filed with claimant's pleading, and it is generally within the court's discretion whether such a bill should be ordered

In the absence of a statute requiring it, it has been held that an itemized account or bill of particulars need not be filed with claimant's pleading to enforce his lien, ³⁰ and it has generally been held that it is within the inherent power of the court in the exercise of sound discretion to order such a bill in a proper case, ³¹ or that such power may exist under general statutes with respect to pleadings ³² If plaintiff pleads a special contract and alleges full and complete performance on his part, a bill of particulars is not necessary ³³ However, where the complaint merely sets up that, under a contract for the furnishing of materials and the erection of a building, claimant furnished material or did work, the nature of the claim is not sufficiently stated without a bill of particulars ³⁴ In a direct proceeding between the owner and the contractor, the same detailed statement is not required as would be required in a proceeding between the owner and the subcontractor ³⁵

Since a bill of particulars is required only to set forth in detail the items which make up the general charge in the pleading, ³⁶ it is sufficient if, when taken in connection with the statements contained in the petition, it advises defendant with reasonable certainty of the petitioner's claim, ³⁷ and, where there is but a single item of account, no bill is necessary ³⁸

Where required by statute In jurisdictions where mechanics' lien statutes require claimant's pleading to be accompanied by an itemized statement or bill of particulars, there must be compliance with the provisions of such statute, ³⁹ including the requirements, if any, as to verification ⁴⁰ Where the filing of an account or bill of particulars is required in order to perfect the right to enforce

Several buildings or improvements. It has been held that, where a materialman has furnished material for the erection of more than one building under a single contract, he cannot be required to file a bill of particulars showing the material furnished for each building separately, ⁴² but it has also been held that in such case defendant has the right to demand a list of the items composing the sum sought to be collected, so as to be protected from surprise when the proof is offered ⁴³

Defects and objections Where the bill of particulars is not intelligible or sufficient, the opposing party may, on application, obtain greater particularity as in ordinary actions ⁴⁴ It has been held, however, that the meagerness of the statement of items filed is not a ground for striking the entire complaint, ⁴⁵ and a declaration is no more demurrable after the filing of a bill of particulars than it was before such filing ⁴⁶ If the account sued on is set out in the pleading, it is not necessary to file a more particular statement as an exhibit unless called for by a special motion ⁴⁷ The fact that the bill of particulars furnished on the trial exceeds the amount of labor and materials alleged in the certificate of lien does not invalidate the lien claim ⁴⁸ An amendment of the bill of particulars does not amend the

It has been held that, while a bill of particulars filed in a mechanic's lien proceeding is a part of the pleading with which it is connected, to the extent that it must relate thereto and be construed with respect thereto, it is in no sense such a component part of the record that subsequent pleadings may be directed to it alone, ⁵⁰ and it has been held that a demurrer will not lie to a bill of particulars ⁵¹ However, it has also been held that an irregularity in connection with a bill of particulars may be raised by a demurrer or motion to strike, ⁵² and that defects or objections respecting a bill of particulars will be regarded as waived if defendant interposes an answer to the merits instead of raising the objection by motion or demurrer. ⁵³ An objection that the bill of particulars in a scire facias on a mechanic's lien includes items not properly the subject of a lien must be made at the trial, and not by exception to the statement of claim ⁵⁴

i. Notice to Owner

Where notice to the owner is required, claimant's pleading must show compliance with such condition; but it is sufficient if compliance is shown with substantial certainty

Where statutory provisions require a particular notice to the owner, claimant's petition or complaint must allege a performance of this condition and show a sufficient notice under the statute. ⁵⁵ If a

Notice that material would be furnished

(1) In suit to establish and enforce lien for materials furnished in construction of church, allegations that acts regarding purchase of materials were so public that it was gross negligence on part of church compliance with the statute is shown with substantial and reasonable certainty, however, the pleading will be sufficient,⁵⁶ and, where several claims are properly united in one lien statement, it is not necessary that the complaint should allege service of notice in each separate cause of action set out, but one allegation in the complaint of the service of the required notice will be sufficient.⁵⁷

J. Filing Lien Claim or Statement

In general, claimant's pleading must allege compliance with statutory requirements as to the lien claim, statement, or notice, and the filing thereof.

to remain silent and permit purchase of materials and construction of building without giving notice or expressing dissent were insufficient to show the giving of statutory notice to owner of property before materials were furnished—Buettner Bros v Good Hope Missionary Baptist Church, 18 So 2d 75, 245 Ala 553

(2) But, where one claims as original contractor, pleading of statutory notice to defendants that materials would be furnished was unnecessary—Guarenire v Bessemer Lumber Co., 106 So 49, 214 Ala 8

will not be held bad for failure to allege such filing.⁶³

A general allegation that the claim was duly made out and filed is not sufficient to show that it contained the essential provisions required by the statute,⁶⁴ or that it was verified as required,⁶⁵ or was filed in time;⁶⁶ but the pleading will be sufficient if it is made to appear therein with reasonable certainty that the legal requirements have been complied with in these respects.⁶⁷ Where the pleading shows that the statement of lien was filed before the indebtedness accrued, the pleading is fatally defective.⁶⁸

Effect of setting out or attaching Where the notice of lien as filed is set out in the pleading or a copy is annexed to, and made a part of, the pleading as an exhibit, it is held that this is a sufficient compliance with the rule that it must affirmatively appear from the complaint that the notice was in proper form and contained all the essential provisions.⁶⁹ On the other hand, it has also been held that the averments of the pleading must show a compliance with the law without reference to the statements filed with the pleading, under the rule that an exhibit cannot aid or destroy a material averment.⁷⁰ However, even where an exhibit cannot be used to supply a material allegation or cure a vital defect, it may be used to make the allegations definite and certain,⁷¹ as where the exhibit shows that the property intended to be covered by the lien is sufficiently described in the statement filed and recorded.⁷²

statement of lien, the complaint need not allege the filing of the statement in each separate cause of action set out, but one allegation of such fact referring to all of the lien claims will be sufficient.⁷³

k. Other Averments

The courts have adjudicated the necessity and sufficiency in claimant's pleading containing averments as to various matters, such as the existence or priority of other liens or claims, and whether claimant has brought any other action to recover his debt.

While it has been held that the claimant's pleading must allege whether there are any other unsatisfied liens on the property on which he seeks to enforce a lien,⁷⁴ it has also been held unnecessary to allege that there are no other lien claimants.⁷⁵ However, where, under the statute, a materialman's lien is given priority as to the land over mortgages subsequent to the commencement of work, and as to the building or improvement over all mortgages, a complaint seeking a lien on the land and improvements must contain a definite allegation as to when the work of improving the realty was commenced and whether a mortgage was executed prior or subsequent thereto,⁷⁶ and, under a statute providing that a mechanic's lien is superior to prior encumbrances only to the extent that the added repairs enhanced the market value of the property, a bill to foreclose a mechanic's lien must allege the condition and value of the property before and after the repairs, so as to permit the determination of the priority and extent of the various liens.⁷⁷ Where plaintiff claims that the beneficiary under a prior trust deed is estopped to set up title under a foreclosure of the trust deed, the complaint must allege facts substantiating such claim.⁷⁸

Where a lessor knowingly permits materialmen to furnish his lessee with building material and a building permanent in character to be erected on the leased premises with such material, the materialmen are not required to allege on their claim of a lien that the improvement enhanced the property's value.—Westphal v Berthold, 273 Ill App 266

Resort to other actions By provision of the statute, claimant may be required to state whether any other action has been brought to recover any part of the debt and, if so, whether any part thereof has been collected, and a complaint which does not comply with this requirement is defective.⁷⁹ Such a provision has been held not to apply to a proceeding in a court which can make no judgment of foreclosure and sale.⁸⁰

Estoppel of owner. Where, under the statute, the owner, having failed to file a notice of completion, is estopped from maintaining a defense based on the ground that the lien was not filed within the time provided, claimant, if his pleadings show that his claim was not filed within the statutory period, must allege the facts showing the estoppel of the owner,⁸¹ and must allege that the statutory notice by the owner was not filed.⁸²

Notice of lis pendens The notice of pendency is of the existence of the action, and, therefore, the complaint is not required to state the filing of a notice which follows the complaint.⁸³

Personal liability In order to support a personal judgment against any defendant, the complaint must allege facts which establish the liability of defendant against whom such judgment is sought.⁸⁴

§ 295. — Purpose of Suit

The purpose of the suit must appear from claimant's pleading

In so far as the facts authorizing an enforcement of the lien are to be alleged, the purpose of the suit must appear,⁸⁵ and, although the remedy is by a personal action, it must be adapted to the object to be accomplished.⁸⁶ In an action in which the judgment is purely to enforce the lien, and not generally against defendant, directing execution be levied on the particular property, the pleading should set up the manner in which defendant is liable in order that the proper form of judgment may be entered.⁸⁷ If there is a prayer for personal judgment by one who is not entitled to such relief in a pleading which is sufficient for the enforcement of the lien, such prayer is of no consequence and cannot affect the right to the enforcement of the lien.⁸⁸

Claimant should plead the facts establishing the class of lienors to which he belongs.

The class of lienors to which complainant belongs should not be alleged as a conclusion but the facts establishing it should be pleaded.⁸⁹ So, a bill for a mechanic's lien need not in express terms allege complainant to be either a contractor or a subcontractor if the material facts necessary to establish the capacity in which the right to relief is claimed are alleged.⁹⁰ Under some statutes, claimant must allege that he was a duly licensed contractor during the performance of his contract.⁹¹

§ 297. — Anticipating Defense

Purely defensive matters need not be anticipated and negatived in claimant's pleading

Matters purely of a defensive nature need not be anticipated and negatived in claimant's pleading.⁹²

§ 298. — Joinder of Counts and Causes

It is generally held that the mechanic's lien laws permit determination of all controversies thereunder in a single proceeding. Ordinarily a claimant may seek to enforce his lien and defendant's personal liability in a single proceeding.

It is generally held that, since mechanic's lien laws are of an equitable nature, they permit determination of all controversies thereunder in a single proceeding.⁹³ Thus, no misjoinder results from the seeking of such relief as is necessary to effect the foreclosure of the lien, as under allegations setting up fraudulent conveyances to defeat the lien⁹⁴ However, a cause of action for enforcement of a lien should not be joined with one for the collection of a debt not included in the lien claim,⁹⁵ and sometimes it is expressly provided by the statute that no other cause of action shall be joined with the equitable action to foreclose the mechanic's lien.⁹⁶

Allegations of the steps taken to obtain a lien do not constitute a separate cause of action, but merely show the right of plaintiff to have the property in controversy subject to the payment of his judgment,⁹⁷ nor is a bill multifarious for making prior mortgagees parties and seeking as against them to subject to complainant's demand that part of the value of the property which resulted from the improvements which complainant put on it in labor and supplies.⁹⁸ Moreover, where claimant's lien applies only to the extent of the amount due from the owner to the principal contractor, allegations of such amount, although appropriate to a cause of action in assumpsit, are equally appropriate to an action in equity to enforce a subcontractor's or materialman's lien, and do not constitute a misjoinder of causes.⁹⁹ Accordingly, separate counts may be joined in an action against the owner and his contractor, presenting two theories: (1) That plaintiff's claim is founded on a contract with the owner, in which case the lien is enforceable for the whole amount, by reason of the personal liability of the owner. (2) Setting up the rights of a subcontractor or materialman furnishing the contractor, in which case the lien is worked out by a species of subrogation.¹

Separate statement. Where separate liens may be joined in one complaint, it is sufficient if the facts concerning each are embraced in separate and distinct statements without the formality of numbering and otherwise designating them.²

Enforcement of lien and of personal liability Since the remedies for the enforcement of the debt and the foreclosure of the lien are regarded as cumulative, as discussed supra § 266, it is ordinarily regarded as permissible for claimant in a single proceeding to seek the enforcement of his lien and of the personal liability of defendant,³ and, where the statute contemplates a personal judgment to be enforced by execution on particular property, it is permissible to join a special count for the enforcement of the lien and common counts for work done and material furnished on an account stated.⁴ In such cases the pleading may be bad for the enforcement of the lien and at the same time good for the recovery of a personal judgment.⁵ Where the

Claims for labor and for materials

Petition joining contractor and owner

A petition by a lumber company joining a contractor for the construction of a building and the owner on an agreement that the owner of the building would pay, direct to the lumber company for materials furnished, money due the contractor as the work progressed, and for a foreclosure of a mechanics' lien, was held not to constitute a misjoinder of actions—*Atkinson v. In a proceeding to enforce mechanic's lien on a building, a count for a personal judgment only may be joined with a count for both a personal judgment and a special order for a sale of the building erected for the payment of the judgment, and plaintiff should not on the trial be compelled to elect on which of the counts he will stand—*Williams & Williams v. statutory practice permits the blending together of proceedings in law and equity, both remedies may be pursued in the same action.⁶ In an action by a subcontractor, the contractor may be joined, as discussed supra § 284, and a personal judgment recovered against him.⁷ However, where the statute authorizes a personal judgment only as incident to the main relief, so that, if the lien fails, the action must fall altogether, as discussed infra § 329, it is not permissible to join in a complaint a cause of action on the lien and one for the debt as on a distinct cause,⁸ and, where the statute requires as a condition precedent to a foreclosure proceeding by a subcontractor that he shall have recovered a judgment for his debt against the contractor, a cause of action against the contractor cannot be joined in the proceeding for the enforcement of the lien.⁹

Plaintiff's pleading must be verified where verification is required by statute, but not otherwise.

A complaint in a statutory action to foreclose the lien need not be verified in the absence of a provision in the statute requiring it.¹⁰ However, plaintiff's pleading must be verified where verification is required by the express provisions of the statutes.¹¹

§ 300. Plea, Answer, or Affidavit of Defense

The defendant is generally required to file a plea or answer in order to form an issue to be tried.

Except as otherwise required by statutory provisions,¹² it has generally been held that defendant, in order properly to form an issue to be tried, should file a plea or answer,¹³ within the time, if any, specifically prescribed.¹⁴ However, an answer is not required where it would serve no good purpose,¹⁵ and no appearance and pleading are necessary to protect the interest of an owner, although made a party, whose interest the court is not authorized to subject under the law applicable to the facts set up in the petition.¹⁶

Scire facias Where the statute as to enforcement of mechanics' liens by scire facias provides a form of the writ in which defendant is notified to file an affidavit of defense, it would seem that a formal plea need not be entered;¹⁷ and the case is at issue on the scire facias and the affidavit of defense unless defendant rules plaintiff to reply to the affidavit of defense.¹⁸ The affidavit of defense must be filed within the time prescribed by the statute.¹⁹

Motions available to defendant Not only may defendant attack plaintiff's pleading by demurrer, considered infra § 305, but, depending on the practice in the particular jurisdiction and the provisions of the statutes, various motions and other proceedings may be available to defendant.²⁰

b Denial or allegation of material facts

ing that he does not admit an allegation is held to be of no consequence if it is not denied⁵⁶ On the other hand, where defendant files no pleading whatsoever, it has been held that plaintiff must nevertheless prove the material facts on which the existence of the lien depends and which facts are not admitted,⁵⁷ but it has also been held, where defendant fails to plead and a default judgment is entered, that allegations of the complaint are admitted of record⁵⁸ By merely pleading a fact in opposition to claimant's right, in the absence of a general denial, the material allegations of claimant's pleading are admitted⁵⁹

A general denial puts in issue only such facts as are issuable⁶¹ On the other hand, matters of defense or in avoidance of the cause of action pleaded must be specially set up and will not be available under a mere general denial of claimant's allegations⁶² Thus defendant must specially plead an estoppel,⁶³ or waiver,⁶⁴ or discharge,⁶⁵ and in an action by subcontractors the defense that plaintiffs guaranteed the contractor's performance and that he failed to perform must be specially pleaded⁶⁶ A denial of an allegation that the claims of defendants are subordinate to plaintiff's lien does not raise a material issue⁶⁷ Matters relied on by way of counterclaim must be sufficiently alleged⁶⁸

In scire facias it has been held that defendant may plead specially matters of which he might avail himself under a general plea⁶⁹ The terre-tenant may plead in bar that the premises on which the lien is claimed have been sold under judicial process, and the lien of the claim, if any, thereby discharged,⁷⁰ and, under a statute allowing defendant to alter his plea or defense on or before the trial of the cause, such a plea need not be pleaded puis darrein continuance.⁷¹

(b) Plea as to Indebtedness

A general denial puts in issue an allegation of performance of the contract by the plaintiff or an allegation of indebtedness from the owner to the principal contractor.

In accordance with the rule, stated supra § 301 a, that the plea should conform to the particular form of remedy through which the lien is enforced, where the lien claim shows that the debt was contracted by the owner, the general issue of non assumpsit is proper,⁷² and nil debet has been held sufficient as a general denial to put the mechanic on proof of his claim, where the statute requires such proof in any event, even on the failure of defendant to appear.⁷³ However, under some court rules, pleadings in scire facias to enforce a mechanic's lien must specially set forth the matters of defense,⁷⁴ and, independent of a rule of court, an owner cannot plead non assumpsit where the labor or materials were furnished by a person employed by the contractor and not by the owner.⁷⁵ If defendant wishes to set up another debt to defeat plaintiff's claim, he must show by his allegations that the debt is a subsisting one.⁷⁶

Performance A general denial puts in issue an allegation of performance of the contract by plaintiff,⁷⁷ and nonperformance, as that the work was unskillfully or defectively performed, may be shown in an answer setting up the fact as a ground of defense.⁷⁸ However, in an action by a materialman who furnished material to the contractor, a breach of contract by the contractor must be pleaded in order to raise an issue on such breach.⁷⁹ The fact that defective material was furnished in violation of the contract may be shown as an equitable defense under the general issue.⁸⁰

Indebtedness to principal contractor. A plea of the general issue or general denial puts in issue the allegation of indebtedness from the owner to the general contractor at the time of the service of notice by the subcontractor,⁸¹ and is sufficient to put the materialman on proof of the amount due for materials furnished,⁸² and a plea by the owner, in suit by the materialman, which sets up facts showing that there was no indebtedness from the owner to the contractor, is sufficient.⁸³ However, where the law gives the subcontractor a direct lien, it has been held that the plea denying defendant's indebtedness to plaintiff is a mere conclusion of law and hence defective,⁸⁴ and, in order that the owner may show that in good faith and in pursuance of his contract he has paid all that he agreed to pay before notice of claims, he must allege such facts. Where the lien of a subcontractor attaches to an installment due the contractor at the filing of the former's lien, an answer setting up damages by way of equitable set-off and counterclaim, by reason of the contractor's failure to complete the work, is bad if it fails to allege that the damage arose and existed at the time the lien was filed.⁸⁵

Payment by contractor. An affidavit of defense in a proceeding to enforce a subcontractor's lien that plaintiff had received from the contractor a sum in excess of the amount due for the work done as measured by the contract price, and had abandoned the work, is sufficient.⁸⁷

(c) Payment and Tender

An allegation of payment should be distinct and positive.

An allegation of payment should be distinct and positive,⁸⁸ but, where the pleading shows the manner of payment and alleges a mutual settlement account by the parties, it is not necessary to file an itemized account of payments.⁸⁹ There need not be a direct negative of an allegation of nonpayment of an alleged contract price,⁹⁰ and it is, for example, sufficient to deny the existence of the contract on which plaintiff charges the liability.⁹¹ Where a husband and wife are made defendants and answer jointly by a general denial, a separate answer by the husband stating that he made the contract without his wife's knowledge or consent and that plaintiffs accepted and received from him a sum stated as payment is improperly stricken.⁹²

An admission of indebtedness in a sum less than that claimed and a tender of the amount admitted is held to be an admission of the lien to that extent,⁹³ but a plea of tender and payment of the money into court under a special contract set up by defendant will not be construed as an admission of the cause of action set up by claimant but only as an admission of the amount due under the special contract pleaded by defendant.⁹⁴ In scire facias under the plea of payment with proper notice, any equity which tends to defeat plaintiff's action may be given in evidence,⁹⁵ but, without notice, defendant may be confined to proof of matters tending to show actual payment.⁹⁶ It has been held that the formal validity of the lien is not put in issue by a plea of payment.⁹⁷

§ 302. Cross Bill or Cross Complaint

b By principal contractor and other lienors

a. In General

A cross bill or cross complaint in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien must be as complete and perfect as an original bill or complaint.

In accordance with the rules governing cross bills and cross complaints in civil actions generally,

a cross bill or cross complaint in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien must be as complete and perfect as an original bill or complaint.⁹⁸ Where the original bill presents questions of equitable cognizance, defendant may have legal relief against plaintiff,⁹⁹ and the several defendants may cross plead with each other and have all rights between them germane to the subject of the bill determined.¹ The cross complainants are concluded by their claims as set up in their pleadings.²

By owner Matter which does not relate to, or depend on, the contract or transaction on which plaintiff's action for the enforcement of a lien is brought or which does not affect the property to which the action relates cannot be set up by cross complaint but is properly cognizable under a counterclaim.³ Defendant has been permitted to file a cross bill against his codefendant for relief to which he is entitled by reason of transactions between these two parties relating to the property involved.⁴ No cross bill is necessary to set up that there is no indebtedness by reason of damage sustained by defendant from a breach of the contract.⁵ An owner setting up damages for delay in completion by a cross complaint is not required to negative defensive matter.⁶ Under a statute providing that the court may adjust and determine the equities of all the parties to the action and the order of priority of different liens and determine all issues raised by any defense or counterclaim in the action, where a lienor made defendant by answer claims a judgment for a sum alleged to be due under its contract, the owner may by answer assert a counterclaim for damages arising out of his contract with the defendant lienor.⁷

principal contractor,⁸ although it has been held that, where a subcontractor brings a suit in equity to enforce a mechanic's lien, the owner has no right to file a cross bill making the sureties on the contractor's bond parties to the suit, for the purpose of enforcing the liability on the bond.⁹ There is, however, authority to the contrary.¹⁰

In proceeding for general settlement In a suit by the owner against all the lienors for the purpose of adjusting or settling all matters between the parties and to prevent the prosecution of separate lien proceedings, the liens of defendants may be enforced by cross bill.¹¹ Since the owner by filing a petition for a general settlement under a statute providing therefor admits the right on the part of a defendant to a lien, defendant does not waive such right by failing to assert it in his answer and by alleging merely such facts as tend to establish the amount due to him from the principal contractor.¹² In an action to settle the rights to a fund in the hands of the owner, the answer of another claimant is required merely to state his right to, or interest in, the fund.¹³

b. By Principal Contractor and Other Lienors

Where the original contractor or some other lienor is made a party defendant he may set up his lien claim by way of answer or cross complaint.

Where the original contractor is joined as a defendant, he may set up by way of answer or cross complaint his claim for a lien,¹⁴ and whether his pleading is to be regarded as an answer or as a cross complaint depends on the facts set up and not on the designation given to it by the pleader.¹⁵ The fact that the principal contractor is made a defendant does not authorize such principal contractor, who has filed no lien, to maintain against the other parties to the suit a cross bill or an answer in the nature of a cross bill for an accounting with the owner and another subcontractor who has filed no lien.¹⁶

Where the statute contemplates the determination of the rights of all lien claimants in one proceeding, as discussed supra § 272, a lien claimant made defendant may by counterclaim or cross bill have a foreclosure of his lien although he seeks no relief as against plaintiff,¹⁷ and it has been held not essential that a formal cross bill be filed as relief may be demanded in the answer,¹⁸ or the facts constituting defendant's cause of action may be set up in an answer in the nature of a cross complaint.¹⁹ However, defendant should set forth his claim so as to show that he has a lien just as though he were plaintiff in the action.²⁰ The general rule in equity requiring a defendant to make himself complainant either by petition or cross bill, or by transfer in some way from the position of a defendant to that of a complainant, asking affirmative relief, is subject in mechanics' lien suits, as in other cases, to the exception that, where a fund or property is in the control of the court to be administered and distributed among those entitled to it, affirmative action is not necessary but relief is proper under an answer setting up facts on which respondent is entitled to it²¹

Under a statute so providing, where a complaint to enforce a mechanic's lien does not admit the liens of claimants who have been made defendants, a claimant who does not answer or who does not set forth his lien in his answer is deemed to have waived his lien,²² and the admission of proof, without objection, in support of a claim, does not dispense with the necessity of alleging it in the answer²³ Under such a statute, where it is alleged that certain persons made defendants are claiming liens and the validity of their liens is not controverted, they are not required by answer to set forth their liens in issuable form,²⁴ but in the absence of an answer by the owner asking that the liens of defendants be declared invalid they are entitled to introduce their evidence and have their liens declared.²⁵

Where an original contractor had not filed his lien, if he merely answers in a suit by a subcontractor, he cannot recover judgment for the amount of his claim over and above the claim of the subcontractor, not having set it up by pleading in the nature of a cross action but will be left to a personal action against the owner²⁶ However, under a statute requiring all lienholders to prove their claims in one proceeding, it has been held that intervening holders of recorded liens may prove their claims without having pleaded them.²⁷

the court and providing that no other notice need be given, the answer is of no effect until so filed.²⁸

Laches. Where laches is not apparent from the face of a cross bill, circumstances constituting it must be availed of by plea or answer²⁹ A lienor made defendant need not allege in his answer or cross bill an excuse for a delay in the prosecution of his suit³⁰

Foreclosure of vendors' or mortgage liens Under a statute providing for the adjudication of all liens and of the rights of all parties interested in the property in one proceeding, considered supra § 272, a defendant may set up and foreclose a vendor's lien as against a codefendant by an intervening petition;³¹ and a mortgagee of property included in the lien may file a cross bill for foreclosure.³²

§ 303. — Answer to Cross Complaint

General rules have been held to apply to answers or motions directed to a cross action in a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien.³³

§ 304. Replication or Reply

Where the defendant's answer sets up new matter the plaintiff may set up in reply facts constituting a defense thereto.

necessary.³⁶ Sometimes under special statutory provision applying to these proceedings replications are dispensed with and the allegations in answers are taken to be controverted,³⁷ and the general equity practice under a statute abolishing special replications in chancery controls where the proceeding for the enforcement of the lien is essentially a chancery one³⁸

A replication to a plea setting up a breach of plaintiff's contract must answer such plea completely when the matter of the plea is not intended to be met by a general replication denying it,³⁹ and plaintiff cannot depart from the cause of action originally set up by him, as by pleading in reply a contract different from that declared on⁴⁰ The omission of a vital statement from the lien claim itself cannot be cured by a replication setting up the omitted facts in answer to a plea based on a condition which the lien claim should have anticipated⁴¹

Admission by failure to deny A general statute providing that matter averred in an answer and not denied in a replication by the other party is to be taken as true in all subsequent proceedings in the cause, without the necessity of proof thereof, has been held to apply in proceedings to enforce a mechanic's lien⁴²

§ 305. Demurrer

- a. In general
- b. Grounds of demurrer

a. In General

In mechanic's lien proceedings issues of law may be raised by demurrer as in other cases

In mechanics' lien proceedings issues of law may be raised by demurrer as in other cases, there being nothing in the statute confining the issues to facts,⁴³ and, even where the statute prescribes as a rule of pleading that defendant shall plead that the property is not liable for the debt, he is not precluded thereby from demurring when plaintiff himself shows that the property described is not liable and that the case is not one within the lien act⁴⁴ In the absence of a statutory permission the owner cannot demur to the answer of a codefendant lienor⁴⁵ Where a defense is common to all the parties defendant, it is immaterial by which of them it is urged and a demurrer to the bill interposed by one, if sustained, will inure to the benefit of all⁴⁶ On the other hand, if two or more defendants join in a demurrer and the pleading is good as to one of them the demurrer will be overruled⁴⁷

Form A failure to allege facts entitling claimant to a lien may, it has been held, be reached by general demurrer,⁴⁸ but objections to allegations formally defective must be specifically pointed out⁴⁹ So it has been held that a special demurrer must be resorted to in order to raise the objection of uncertainty,⁵⁰ or a formal objection to a description of the premises,⁵¹ or a failure to allege the time of performance of the labor or the filing of lien claims,⁵² or the absence of a proper defendant,⁵³ and a general demurrer will not reach a failure to state that at the time materials were furnished no payments had been made by the owner to the contractor.⁵⁴

54. Colo—Ditto v Jackson, 33 P 81, 3 Colo App 381

An objection that a complaint, on a theory that the contract between the owner and principal contractor is void, which alleges facts entitling plaintiff to recover whether it is void or valid, contains two causes of action not separately stated cannot be urged by general demurrer⁵⁵ Where a demurrer will lie to reach defects in the statement of claim made a part of claimant's pleadings, a defect in the affidavit must be urged by special demurrer⁵⁶

Effect of demurrer For the purpose of determining the questions raised, a demurrer admits all facts which are well pleaded,⁵⁷ but it does not admit the conclusions of the pleader⁵⁸ An allegation that a defendant has some interest in the premises may be admitted by demurrer⁵⁹

Failure to demur, waiver of objections Mere defective allegations must be raised by demurrer or the defects will be deemed to have been waived and cannot be raised on the trial,⁶⁰ and pleading over or abandoning a demurrer is a waiver of mere defects or objections which may be cured by amendment⁶¹ Thus an objection on the ground of want of proper parties defendant is waived where not taken by demurrer,⁶² and a demurrer because of nonjoinder of defendants is waived by answer raising issues of fact,⁶³ and the same is true of a demurrer because of ambiguity and uncertainty as to the time when the improvement was completed⁶⁴ However, where the objection goes to the right to recover, on the application of the law to the facts, the question may be decided after the evidence is in notwithstanding it could have been raised by demurrer,⁶⁵ and, where plaintiff's proceeding is contrary to the statute which alone gives him the right to maintain the suit, the objection goes to the foundation of the action and may be taken at the trial⁶⁶ Where an exception may be taken in an answer or at the trial, it cannot be said to have been lost under the application of the rule that an answer overrules a demurrer⁶⁷

A demurrer will lie to raise objections only to defects appearing on the face of the pleading

Under the general rules controlling the grounds of demurrer in proceedings in equity or at law, a demurrer will not lie unless the defect appears on the face of the pleading⁶⁸ If claimant's pleading shows on its face that he has no lien or fails to show the facts essential to the right, his suit should be dismissed on demurrer,⁶⁹ or on a plea or motion which is in effect a demurrer,⁷⁰ unless he is entitled to recover a personal judgment and his pleading is good for that, in which event the demurrer will be overruled⁷¹ A general demurrer should be overruled if the complaint entitles complainant to any relief⁷² The objection that, the owner having sold a portion of the property, that part retained by him should first be resorted to cannot be raised on a demurrer to the petition on the ground that it fails to state a cause of action⁷³

Partial defense Where a partial defense is not pleaded as such, it is a ground for demurrer⁷⁴

Uncertainty Mere uncertainty or indefiniteness in some of the particulars of the pleading should be raised on a motion to make more certain and not by demurrer,⁷⁵ although, where a statute allows a demurrer for uncertainty and ambiguity, such a demurrer may be resorted to in mechanics' lien proceedings.⁷⁶ A general demurrer on the ground that the petition does not state facts entitling plaintiff to relief in equity will not avail to raise the question of indefiniteness in the description of the property sought to be charged.⁷⁷

Want of verification. Under the general equity practice allowing objections to the form of the bill to be taken by demurrer, advantage may be taken by demurrer of a failure to verify the bill as required by statute.⁷⁸ An objection to a plea for the want of verification should be taken by a motion to strike and not by demurrer.⁷⁹

Limitations and laches. Where from the face of complainant's pleadings it appears that the proceeding is not brought within the time required by the statute creating the lien, the objection is properly presented by demurrer.⁸⁰ Laches in filing an intervening petition in chancery to enforce a lien may be urged by demurrer.⁸¹ Where it does not appear from the complaint that the redocketing of the lien essential to its continuance was prevented by some failure of duty on the part of plaintiff, the question cannot be raised by demurrer.⁸²

Defect in parties. An objection for want of proper parties disclosed by the pleading may be taken by demurrer.⁸³ So, where the principal contractor is regarded as a proper and necessary party, a failure to join him may be urged by demurrer.⁸⁴ It has, however, been held that the subcontractor is required only to follow the course pointed out by the statute and that, although the contractor is a proper party, his omission cannot be raised by demurrer.⁸⁵ Under a statute requiring the joinder of all lienors, a complaint cannot be regarded as not stating a cause of action because it fails to allege that there

Joinder and statement of causes. An objection that an action to foreclose a lien against the owner and another to recover a personal judgment against a party liable therefor are not separately stated should be raised by motion and not by demurrer,⁸⁷ and does not arise on a demurrer for misjoinder of actions where such actions may properly be joined.⁸⁸ A mechanic's lien which contains a number of items of account constitutes but a single cause of action, and specific items cannot be reached by demurrer.⁸⁹ However, where the statute requires that for labor and materials performed and furnished in the construction of two or more buildings claimant shall apportion to each building such labor or materials as went into it and that the declaration for each shall be in the form in which plaintiff would have declared if the labor and material apportioned for the particular building had been performed and furnished for it alone, a declaration which fails so to proceed is demurrable, the defect appearing on its face.⁹⁰

Objections to Lien Claim. Where the affidavit or statement on which the lien is based is not made a part of the pleading, its sufficiency cannot be questioned on a demurrer to the pleading.⁹¹ On the other hand, where the claim is set out in the pleading or attached as a part thereof, a demurrer will lie if the claim is bad.⁹² Where there is nothing on the face of the pleadings to show that the lien notice incorrectly describes the property, the objection cannot be urged by demurrer.⁹³ The question whether property may be identified from the description in the lien claim will be determined as a question of fact rather than one of law properly presented by demurrer.⁹⁴ In proceedings by scire facias under some statutes, the question of law involving the validity of the lien should be raised by demurrer or motion to strike off the lien and cannot be raised under a pleading raising an issue of fact⁹⁵

§ 306. Amendments

- a In general
- b Amendments allowable
- c. Plea or answer to amended pleading

a. In General

In general the pleadings in proceedings to enforce a mechanic's lien may be amended as in other civil proceedings.

As a general rule the pleadings in an action, suit, or proceeding for the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien may be amended as in other actions, suits, or proceedings,⁹⁶ either under the general statutes which are held to apply to these proceedings⁹⁷ or under special provisions in the mechanics' lien laws⁹⁸. Thus the grant of leave to a defendant to amend his answer is within the discretion of the court,⁹⁹ and the refusal of permission will not be interfered with¹ unless there has been a plain abuse of discretion².

Verification. Where the original petition is not required to be verified, an amendment need not be verified although the original petition is sworn to³.

Time for amendment. As in other civil cases, an amendment will be allowed after trial in order to make the allegations conform to the proof on the trial,⁴ at least where no prejudice is shown⁵ or evidence is received without objection,⁶ and, when evidence of a material fact is admitted without objection in conformity with the theory of the case, a defect in the pleading by reason of an omission of allegation to which the evidence is pertinent may be considered as amended to conform to the proof⁷. As appears supra § 282, a mere defect in pleading which does not go to the validity of a lien itself may be cured by amendment even after the expiration of the statutory period limited for the commencement of the proceedings, provided the action was brought and the original pleading filed in time. However, where claimant fails to file an amended petition within the time fixed by the court, it cannot be thereafter filed unless by further order of the court⁸. The arrest of judgment puts an end to the case and the subsequent filing of an amended complaint does not bring the parties back into the court.⁹

Such amendments of the pleadings are allowable as will not prejudice or surprise the adversary. While the form of action may be changed by amendment, a new and different cause of action may not thereby be substituted for the original cause of action.

The rule permitting amendments is applied to such amendments as will not prejudice or cause surprise to the adversary of the amending party.¹⁰ In accordance with this rule various amendments have been allowed,¹¹ such as amendments to correct a petition defective for failure to show how far the work has progressed and what payments are due,¹² to show performance of the contract,¹³ or to show a modification of the contract instead of performance,¹⁴ to reform allegations setting out the particulars of the account, or to supply such allegations,¹⁵ to correct defects in the prayer as to the property sought to be subjected to the lien,¹⁶ or to amend the prayer so as to ask for a personal judgment,¹⁷ to make a proper statement as to the ownership of the property against which the lien is asserted,¹⁸ to correct an inaccuracy in the lien statement,¹⁹ to include additional items of labor or materials furnished,²⁰ to make the allegations show that the materials were furnished for the particular building,²¹ to supply an allegation of notice to the owner²² or the filing of a lien,²³ to correct allegations as to the sufficiency of such notice or lien claim,²⁴ or to insert a statutory allegation that no other action has been brought on the debt.²⁵ The prayer of the complaint may be amended to include a claim for interest.²⁶ A materialman's petition may be amended by alleging that the contract price was equal to, or greater than, the amount of the lien sought.²⁷

Where the original complaint is so defective as to confer no jurisdiction on the court, the court has no power to allow an amendment conferring jurisdiction.²⁸ An amendment allowed without objection in an action by a materialman to which the contractor is not a party setting up that plaintiff has a judgment against the contractor may permit the foreclosure to proceed.²⁹

Change in form of action. The proceeding for the enforcement of mechanics' liens may be converted by amendment into an ordinary suit for the collection of the debt for work and material as between the parties respectively liable and entitled to the judgment in such an action.³⁰ Similarly, it has been held that a personal action to recover for material or labor may be changed in form to a proceeding in rem for the enforcement of the mechanic's lien,³¹ and where a special contract is stated the action may be converted into one on the contract.³² However, where, on the statements in the complaint and the conceded facts, no lien can be established, plaintiff cannot be allowed by amendment to convert a proceeding instituted under the mechanics' lien law into an ordinary action for the recovery of money against the contractor.³³

Introduction of new cause of action. Plaintiff may not substitute for the original cause of action a new and different one under the guise of an amendment,³⁴ but an amendment which introduces no new cause of action distinct and complete in itself, but which is merely variant from the original pleading in the statement of facts pertinent to the cause of action originally stated,³⁵ or properly states the cause which was not sufficiently stated in the original pleading,³⁶ is not obnoxious to the rule. Where the petition does not seek a personal judgment, but is merely to foreclose the lien against the property, an amendment to conform to the facts stating that the contract was entered into with both defendants instead of with one of them as originally alleged is not objectionable as setting forth a new cause of action.³⁷

Description of property or improvements Failure to describe particularly the property³⁸ or the building or improvement on which the lien is claimed,³⁹ or a mistake in the description of the property,⁴⁰ may be corrected by amendment, at least as long as the amended description keeps within the bounds included by the original.⁴¹

As to parties An amendment may be allowed to correct a mistake in the name of claimant⁴² or defendant,⁴³ or to add matter of description of the person of defendant.⁴⁴ So also it has been held that new parties may be brought in,⁴⁵ or original parties stricken,⁴⁶ by amendment, but under the guise of an amendment the proceeding cannot be converted into a suit against another person.⁴⁷ An action against a husband cannot be converted into one against the wife by alleging that her husband acted as her agent, the wife not being a party to the original suit.⁴⁸ However, an amendment setting up that a contractor acted as agent of the owner has been permitted,⁴⁹ and, where it appears that the material was furnished and work performed for the benefit of the joint property of the husband and wife, an amendment may be allowed at the close of the evidence that the husband in making the contract was acting not only for himself, but as agent for his wife.⁵⁰ Where the petition attempts to allege a joint liability between defendants, an amendment may be permitted which states the nature of such joint liability.⁵¹

Parties made defendant on the ground that they have an interest in the property should, after they part with their interest in the controversy, amend their answer and set up a disclaimer of interest.⁵²

c. Plea or Answer to Amended Pleading

Where an amendment is made after the issues are formed and the evidence has been heard in whole or in part, time should be given to file an answer to such amended pleading.

When an amendment is made after the issues are formed and the evidence has been heard in whole or in part, time should be given to file an answer to such amended pleading,⁵³ but a general denial pleaded to the original may be sufficient to put in issue the allegations of an amended pleading.⁵⁴

Permission to plead Under an order permitting the withdrawal of original pleas and granting leave to file "further pleas in his behalf," only pleas to the merits can be pleaded and not a plea in abatement because of the dismissal of the suit as to certain defendants.⁵⁵

are controlled primarily by the pleadings, and no issue can be raised on an unnecessary or immaterial allegation in a complaint or other pleading

In accordance with general rules, the scope and extent of the issues in actions to enforce mechanics' liens are controlled primarily by the pleadings,⁵⁶ and no issue can be raised on an unnecessary or immaterial allegation in a complaint or other pleading.⁵⁷ Thus essential elements, pertinent to a particular theory of claimant's cause, which are not alleged cannot be proved⁵⁸ or established by the finding.⁵⁹ However, the permission of the introduction of evidence without objection relating to an issue not presented by the pleadings may amount to a consent to try such issue.⁶⁰

In an action to enforce a mechanic's lien all matters which are material or essential to a cause of action or a defense must not only be alleged in the pleadings but must be proved.⁶¹ Thus proof is required as to every material allegation in the petition not admitted of record to be true;⁶² but proof is not required as to matters which are admitted or deemed admitted,⁶³ except those which, under the practice in the particular jurisdiction, may be necessary in order to support a default judgment.⁶⁴ Evidence conforming to the pleadings and the issues raised thereby, and only such evidence, is admissible.⁶⁵

Title. The court may determine whether a deed by the owner was in fact a mortgage where this is necessary to a determination of whether the proceeding was brought in time.⁶⁶ However, where it is contended that improvements were made under a contract with the agent of the owner, a question of title as between the owner and the occupant of the premises has been held immaterial.⁶⁷ On the ground that title cannot be tried, it has been held that a claimant asserting a lien on a structure only cannot in support thereof show that title to the land upon which the structure was located was not acquired until after the lien attached.⁶⁸ Where the complaint alleges that a defendant is the owner and that he took title subject to plaintiff's lien, evidence which tends to show that defendant's title was derived through a foreclosure sale on a first mortgage which was superior to claimant's lien is admissible under the pleadings.⁶⁹

Quantity of land. Under a statute so requiring, claimant must show the amount of land necessary to satisfy the lien and judgment,⁷⁰ and it would seem that even in the absence of statute claimant is bound to show the amount of land necessary for the building on which the lien is claimed.⁷¹ It is not necessary for a lien claimant to show that the quantity of land on which the lien is claimed is within the statutory limit, since if defendant claims that it exceeds that limit he must show it, and the court must then confine the lien to a tract within the limit.⁷²

Material used in several buildings. It has been held that a materialman claiming a lien on several houses built under one operation need not prove just what material went into any particular house;⁷³ but there is also some authority to the contrary.⁷⁴

Pleading showing no lien. Where the petition states a cause of action for a recovery of sums claimed to be due for labor and materials, evidence may be introduced under it, although the facts stated show that plaintiff is not entitled to a lien.⁷⁵

Issues affecting other lienors or encumbrancers. Under statutes contemplating the determination of all liens and encumbrances in one proceeding, considered supra § 272, where other lienors are made defendants, but are in reality plaintiffs as against the owner, their rights may be determined notwithstanding a default in pleading by plaintiff instituting the proceedings.⁷⁶ Each lienor is entitled to have his case determined on the facts which he has properly pleaded and proved,⁷⁷ and, at least as against a general objection, evidence may be admitted if it is admissible in support of a claim asserted by any lienholder.⁷⁸ So the fact that the owner has allowed a default judgment to be taken against him will not prevent a mortgagee defendant from proving payment where he may attack the judgment for fraud or collusion.⁷⁹ The consolidation, for the purpose of trial, of actions by contractors, materialmen, etc., against the owner, does not change the issues in the respective cases, or render ineffectual admissions in the pleadings between the contractors and owner.⁸⁰

In an action by the owner for a general settlement, where the petition prays for an accounting and an ascertainment by the court of the amount due from the owner to the contractor, items claimed for extra work may properly be taken into consideration.⁸¹

b. Variance

- (1) In general
- (2) Between lien claim and pleading
- (3) Between lien claim and proof

(1) In General

As in civil actions generally, the proofs must correspond with the allegations; but variances which are not substantial will be disregarded.

In accordance with general rules, in an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien the trial must be conducted and a conclusion reached on the proofs, as well as the allegations, of the parties, and the proofs must correspond with the allegations.⁸² Thus, under an allegation that the owner has funds available in his hands, it cannot be proved that the owner has paid in advance and in bad faith.⁸³ Moreover, claimant must recover, if at all, on the contract as alleged, and proof of another contract or of terms different from those alleged will be fatal,⁸⁴ and if the contract, as stated in the complaint, is too indefinite to support a lien it cannot be shown by the evidence to be more specific and precise.⁸⁵ Similarly, if a claimant alleges performance on his part he can recover only by establishing that fact, and anything short of a substantial performance will not do in the absence of allegations justifying or authorizing such proof.⁸⁶

If the proof follows the allegations in essential particulars, variances which are not substantial should be disregarded,⁸⁷ no one being misled to his

(3) Where petition in mechanic's lien suit, stating cause of action based on mechanic's lien law, alleged that record owner was straw man holding title to defraud plaintiff, proof that record owner was owner in fact and that plaintiff contracted injury,⁸⁸ and if an allegation of the complaint is admitted by the answer it becomes unnecessary to prove such allegation, and a variance between such admitted allegation and proof offered is immaterial.⁸⁹ A conclusion of the pleader as to the effect of the contract may be disregarded in determining whether there is a variance between the pleading and proof thereof.⁹⁰

Express contract and quantum meruit While it has been held that under an allegation of an express contract plaintiff cannot recover on a quantum meruit,⁹¹ the fact that claimant fails to recover for items for extra work not included in an express contract will not prevent a recovery for the work done under the contract,⁹² and if claimant sues for work and labor performed and materials furnished, as on the common counts, as well as on a special contract, his suit cannot be dismissed for failure to prove a performance of the contract on his part.⁹³ There is no fatal variance between an allegation of an express contract to pay the reasonable value of materials furnished and proof of an implied agreement.⁹⁴ An allegation that plaintiff by doing certain work had acquired a lien on the property is supported by evidence that the lien arose from an indebtedness arising out of a direct or ratified contract.⁹⁵ There is no variance between a pleading in the form of a common count for work, labor, and materials, and proof of an agreement that the charge shall be on a cost-plus basis, since such agreement provides merely a basis for calculating the ultimate price.⁹⁶ However, proof that services and materials were to be furnished at cost

plus has been held not to support a complaint to foreclose a mechanic's lien based on a contract calling for the payment of reasonable value.⁹⁷

With whom contract made generally Where a claimant seeking to enforce his lien alleges that he made a contract with a certain person in a certain capacity, his proof must conform to such allegation.⁹⁸ While it has been held that a subcontractor who alleges that his work was done under an agreement with the contractor cannot establish a lien for work under a contract with the owner,⁹⁹ in a jurisdiction where it is held that, if the contract between the owner and contractor is void because not recorded, a lien may be maintained for materials furnished to the contractor as though they had been furnished at the personal instance of the owner, there is no variance between an allegation that they were so furnished and proof that they were furnished to the contractor,¹ and the fact that a subcontractor is entitled under the statute to enforce his claim against the owner where the original contract is void does not render him an original contractor so as to create a variance from his complaint in which he sues as subcontractor.²

Joint contracts Where it is alleged that defendants contracted jointly, plaintiff must recover according to that theory.³ Under this rule it has been held that, where it is alleged that husband and wife are owners and parties to the contract, evidence that the husband had no interest and was not a party is a fatal variance,⁴ and it has been held, where it is alleged that an agreement was made with both spouses as to property held by the entirety, that it with him as owner was held not a fatal variance—Mansfield Lumber Co v Johnson, Mo App, 91 S W 2d 239

Variance held not fatal

In materialman's action to foreclose lien for materials furnished for plumbing work, where complaint alleged that plaintiff furnished materials under agreement with named persons, the contractors, for construction of house, but evidence showed that one of such persons was merely plumbing subcontractor, such variance was immaterial and could be disregarded—Pierce, Butler & Pierce Mfg Corporation v Enders, 174 A 169, 118 Conn 610 is a fatal variance to prove that the contract was signed by the husband only, notwithstanding the wife's knowledge and assent⁵ or evidence of the husband's agency and the wife's ratification or estoppel⁶. It has also been held that evidence that property is owned by a husband and wife will not support a lien where it was alleged that the material was furnished to the husband alone⁷ unless it is shown that the husband alone owned the lot at the time the materials were furnished, or was his wife's agent⁸.

On the other hand, it has been held that the fact that a petition describes land as owned by a man and his wife, whereas they were not joint owners, is not fatally variant from the proof,⁹ and that, where it is alleged that husband and wife, owners by the entirety, contracted for the building to be erected upon the premises, the fact that the wife did not join did not render the petition insufficient,¹⁰ and that, in the case of community realty, an allegation that the husband and wife made the contract was not fatally variant from proof that the husband alone made it, there being no showing of prejudice to defendant¹¹.

(2) Between Lien Claim and Pleading

A material and substantial variance between the essential allegations of claimant's pleading and the lien claim or notice is fatal.

A material and substantial variance between the essential allegations of claimant's pleading and the lien claim or notice is fatal,¹² as, for example, with reference to the terms of the contract,¹³ or the parties to the contract,¹⁴ or the description of the property,¹⁵ or to whom the material was furnished¹⁶. So a lien claim setting up an express contract and performance is inconsistent with a complaint seeking to enforce a lien for a quantum meruit after abandonment of the contract¹⁷.

Variances which are not material or are merely technical and do not affect the claim or its identity, however, are not fatal,¹⁸ and it has been held that incongruous matter in the lien paper not affecting its validity and which may be rejected as surplusage will not give rise to a variance by reason of its

(2) Materialman, in action for labor and material, was held not es-topped to allege that defendant was real owner, because, in mechanic's lien filed against building, materialman recognized another as owner—Nusbaum v Warwick Hotel Co, 170 A 388, 112 Pa Super 277.

Variance not shown

(1) In subcontractor's suit to foreclose a mechanic's lien for labor performed on defendants' residence, allegations of notice of lien that the contract was entered into between defendants' contractor and subcontractor were not necessarily at variance with allegations of complaint that contract was entered into between defendants and subcontractor, in view of statute making the contractor in charge of the construction the owners' agent—Andersen v Turpin, 142 P 2d 999, 172 Or 420

(2) A lien claimant stating in notice of lien that the materials were furnished to named person and that the named person's wife was the owner of the property, could allege in complaint in suit to foreclose lien that the named person acted on his own behalf and as common-law agent for his wife in purchasing the materials and that wife held legal title in her own name in trust for herself and named person as tenants by the entirety—Drake Lumber Co v Lindquist, 170 P 2d 712, 179 Or 402 omission from the pleading¹⁹ and that a mere mistake in the lien notice may be corrected by the complaint²⁰. There is no material variance between the allegations and the statement where both refer to the same lot, the same building, the same labor, the same indebtedness, and the same contract between the same parties²¹. Where the statute does not require the lien statement to set forth the extent and character of the liability created by the contract, there is no fatal variance between a lien claim stating that a certain individual was the contractor and a petition which states that he is the real owner²² or between a lien claim which states that the contract is made with an individual who is authorized and empowered by the owner to erect the improvement and a petition counting on a joint contract by such individual and the owner²³.

(3) Between Lien Claim and Proof

A material variance between the statement in the lien claim and the proof is fatal; but a variance is not fatal if it is not substantial or misleading or prejudicial to defendant.

A material variance between a statement of the facts required by the statute to be contained in the lien claim and the proof is fatal²⁴. So, where the statute requires the claim to contain a statement of the terms and conditions of the contract, if controverted, the terms of the contract must be proved by la claimant substantially as set out in his notice of lien²⁵. However, under the rules as to the materiality of variance generally, a recovery will not be defeated because of a variance which is not substantial²⁶ or misleading²⁷ or prejudicial to defendant²⁸ as, for example, in the case of a variance in the date of completion, the statement being filed within the required time in any event²⁹.

So, where under the circumstances the wife in legal effect was a party to the contract, evidence that the contract was executed by the husband alone is not fatally variant from a statement that both husband and wife were parties³⁰ and, if the lien claim states that the material was furnished to the contractor, there is no variance between the statement and proof of facts showing that the contract with the owner was void, and that under the statute the materialman may be deemed to have furnished the material to the owner³¹. Evidence as to work done showing the character of the improvement may be admitted although it is omitted from the lien claim³².

Agreed price Under a statute requiring the claim to contain a statement of the terms and conditions of the contract, it has been held that there is a fatal variance between a lien claim to the effect that there is no express agreement as to price and evidence that materials were furnished for such a price.³³ It has, however, been held that on the contrary there is no material variance between a statement alleging an agreement as to price and proof that material was delivered without such an agreement, but that its actual market value corresponded to the agreed price stated in the claim,³⁴ and that, where the reasonable market price of material and the stipulated price are the same, a variance between the lien claim and the proof as to

In a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien the claimant has the burden of proving his cause of action.

It is presumed that every mechanic or materialman desires the security given by the mechanics' lien laws.³⁸ The existence of a lien or privilege is not presumed,³⁹ no act necessary to the acquisition of the lien can be presumed to have been performed in the absence of proof that it was performed.⁴⁰ In a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien claimant has the same burden of proving his cause of action as rests on complainant in other civil actions,⁴¹ and, where the allegations of his pleadings are properly in issue, the burden of proof is on him to establish his right to a lien,⁴² and to show that he has complied with all of the essential requirements of the statute under which he claims,⁴³ and, if other parties are permitted to intervene in the action and file denials, as they are entitled to do, this will not relieve claimant of his burden of proof but he still has the affirmative of the issue to maintain⁴⁴

Where claimant has established a prima facie case, the burden of evidence shifts to the owner⁴⁵ Defendant has the burden of proving affirmative defenses⁴⁶ and matters of set-off, counterclaim, and recoupment⁴⁷ As to facts which rest peculiarly within defendant's knowledge the onus of proving them is on him⁴⁸

In the absence of evidence of direct purchases or labor contracts by the owner, it must be presumed that the lien claimants dealt with the contractor⁴⁹ In a proceeding by a subcontractor or materialman, it will be presumed that the owner and the contractors have complied with the provisions of the statute⁵⁰ The rule that, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the holder of a negotiable note is presumed to be a good-faith purchaser for value and without notice so that his right to judgment is not affected by undisclosed equities between prior parties prevails only to facilitate the transfer of negotiable paper and applies only to the maker's personal obligation and not to the right to enforce the lien securing the debt, so as to permit the foreclosure of the lien by an assignee of the note and lien asserting a purchase in good faith for value and without notice⁵¹

Under a bill for a general settlement for the purpose of adjusting the claims of all lienors, as considered supra § 302, the burden is on the lienors to prove every fact required by statute to establish their right to a lien on the premises⁵² However, it has been held that, where the owner sues seeking to pay the various lien claims pro rata because the aggregate outstanding claims exceed the contract price, the burden is on the owner to prove not only the contract price but also that after paying all other valid liens there is not enough of the contract price remaining to satisfy a particular claimant⁵³

b. Reliance on Credit of Property

In a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, where such fact is necessary to the existence of a lien, the burden is on the claimant to prove that the material or labor was furnished on the credit of the property.

Where it is necessary to the existence of a mechanic's lien that the labor or material be furnished on the credit of the building or property, as considered supra § 46, the burden of proving such fact is on claimant,⁵⁴ but, where there is nothing in the record in negation of a lien, it will be presumed that material was furnished on the security afforded by the property in which it entered⁵⁵

It is presumed that the credit of the building is relied on where claimant has complied with all of the provisions of the Lien Law,⁵⁶ and, where he shows that the material or labor was furnished on or about the construction of the building and the claim was properly made and filed, defendant must show that the debt was made on the credit of the contractor alone,⁵⁷ but the presumption that the credit of the building was relied on may be rebutted by evidence that the material was not used therein, and by the fact that it was charged to the contractor⁵⁸

c. Property or Interest Subject

In a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, the burden is on the claimant to establish the identity of the property which he seeks to subject to the lien.

The burden is on claimant to establish the identity of the property which he seeks to subject,⁵⁹ and, since the lien attaches only to the interest which the party making the contract has in the property, claimant has the burden, where the right to the lien is controverted, to establish the extent of such interest⁶⁰ and the fact of ownership⁶¹ The burden is on claimant, in the absence of any presumption as to character of defendant's ownership, to show ownership in a person or persons competent to contract so as to bind the property⁶² If a person is shown to be the owner of property within a short time of the attaching of the lien, he may be presumed still to be the owner⁶³ A person in possession of premises is presumed to have an interest chargeable with a lien until the contrary is made to appear⁶⁴

Where defendant seeks to avoid the lien on a plea of homestead, he has the burden of proving when the claimed homestead character attached to the property⁶⁵ Where the record title is in the community of husband and wife, the burden is on the wife to show that it is her separate property and that claimant had notice thereof before furnishing labor and materials on a purchase by the husband.⁶⁶ Under a statute providing that property subject to a mechanic's lien may be ordered removed to satisfy the lien where the land on which the property is situated cannot be subjected to the lien, claimant has the burden of proving that the property is removable from the land.⁶⁷

In the absence of proof to the contrary, it will be presumed that a small lot in a town is necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of buildings put on it⁶⁸

Appurtenances Where claimant seeks to include in his lien buildings into which his labor or material has not entered, the burden is on him to show that they are appurtenant to the building for whose construction he furnished labor and material.⁶⁹

d. Delivery and Use of Material

In a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, the burden is on claimant to establish that he furnished the labor or materials for which the lien is claimed.

The burden is on claimant to establish that he furnished the labor or materials for which the lien is claimed⁷⁰ The burden is also on him to show a compliance with the conditions to a right to a lien imposed under the particular statute under which the lien is sought,⁷¹ such, for example, as that the material is furnished for the building sought to be charged,⁷² or its actual use in such building,⁷³ or that it is furnished under a contract, agreement, or understanding that it is to be used in the erection or repair of the building⁷⁴

A presumption of the use of materials in a building or improvement arises from the fact of their delivery thereto for that purpose⁷⁵ The presumption is rebuttable,⁷⁶ and the burden of showing the contrary is on defendant.⁷⁷ Under a statute requiring the material to be actually used or incorporated in the building, where the evidence shows that some of the material has been diverted, it is incumbent on the materialman to show the part used⁷⁸ Where it is shown that material is placed in a building, it may be presumed that it was furnished for that purpose⁷⁹ So, it has been held that, if a materialman furnishes suitable material to a person who he knows is erecting a building, it will be presumed that the materials are furnished for that building⁸⁰

Material furnished for several buildings Where material is furnished to a defendant engaged in erecting several buildings, if it is of materiality to defendant, the burden is on him to show in which of the buildings the material was used⁸¹ Where, however, claimant seeks a lien on a part only of the buildings, the burden is on him to establish the identity of material furnished to the property on which the lien is sought⁸²

e. Agreement or Consent of Owner

- (1) In general
- (2) Knowledge and failure to object

(1) In General

In a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, the burden of proving a contract with the owner is on the party asserting it.

The burden of proving a contract with the owner is on the party asserting it,⁸³ but, although there is no evidence that the owner agreed to pay on the completion of the work, it has been held that such terms will be implied, if no others were specified, to support an allegation that labor and materials were to be paid for at that time⁸⁴ Where it is alleged that no contract was recorded in the proper office, there is a presumption that no acceptance of the contract was recorded⁸⁵

Subcontractors and materialmen The burden rests on one furnishing labor or material to show that it was furnished by virtue of a contract with the owner or with his consent⁸⁶ For example, the burden rests on him to establish a contract or agreement between the owner and the person for whom the work is done or to whom the materials are furnished⁸⁷ A presumption as to the consent of the owner to the furnishing of labor or material arises from the fact of the contract between the owner and the general contractor⁸⁸ One furnishing material who desires the benefit accruing to an original contractor has the burden of establishing that he is such a contractor⁸⁹

Agency Where the contract is claimed to have been entered into with an agent of the owner, claimant has the burden of proving the fact of such agency⁹⁰ and also his authority⁹¹ In an action to foreclose a lien for costs of improvements erected by a lessee, claimant has the burden of proving that an agency was created by the lessor so as to subject the leased realty to the lien⁹²

Consent of equitable owner. It will be presumed that the equitable owners consented to the erection of a building at the instance of those holding the legal title and who had authority to charge the property with debts⁹³

Validity It will not be presumed that a contract between the owner and the contractor has not been recorded as required by statute⁹⁴

Cancellation of contract. The owner has the burden of establishing a defensive averment of cancellation of a contract for materials⁹⁵

(2) Knowledge and Failure to Object

In a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, the burden is on the claimant, where his work is not done under a contract with the owner, to establish the owner's knowledge so as to bind him for his failure to give the required statutory notice of nonliability.

Where under the statute a building or improvement constructed on land with the knowledge of the owner is to be deemed as having been constructed at his instance, unless he shall, after obtaining knowledge, give notice of nonliability, as considered supra § 84, the burden is on the lien claimant, where his work is not done under a contract with the owner, to establish his knowledge,⁹⁶ since without such knowledge the statutory presumption does not arise⁹⁷ Where the knowledge of the owner is shown, the burden rests on him to establish that he has given the statutory notice of nonliability⁹⁸ The burden rests on him to excuse a failure to give notice,⁹⁹ or to show, if such is the case, that the time therefor was extended by intervening holidays,¹ and that formal objection was made within the time so extended² Where the owner posts a notice, under the statute, that he will not be liable for repairs on the property, a presumption arises that it remained a sufficient length of time to impart knowledge to the persons it is intended to affect³

Apart from statute, a presumption of agency arising from ownership and knowledge of the work which is being done under a contract with another may be rebutted.⁴

f. Performance of Contract

The burden is on claimant in a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien to show performance of his contract.

Contractual right to recover for partial performance

In suit by assignee of mechanic's lien to recover balance due on note given for contract price and to foreclose the lien, burden was on assignee to introduce evidence to show

Under a statute allowing a lien to the extent of the enhanced value of the property where the owner or claimant of the property against which the lien is asserted holds under an executory contract which is rescinded or set aside, the burden rests on claimant of the lien after the contract or purchase is rescinded to show the extent to which the actual value of the property has been enhanced³⁵ Where defendant has shown that there are certain omissions and defects in the work, the burden rests on plaintiff to establish the reasonable cost of remedying them³⁶ Where plaintiff under a quantum meruit complaint proves the full value of his services to defendant, if there should be any deductions therefrom by way of mitigation of the amount of recovery, the burden is on defendant to show the amount thereof³⁷

i. Indebtedness of Owner to Contractor

Where the lien of a subcontractor, laborer, or materialman attaches only to sums due or which become due from the owner to the principal contractor at or after the filing of a claim or notice, the burden in a proceeding to enforce the lien generally is on the lienor to establish the amount then due or which is to become due.

Where the lien of a subcontractor, laborer, or materialman attaches only to sums due or which become due from the owner to the principal contractor at or after the filing or service of a claim or notice, as considered supra § 174, it is generally held that the burden is on the lienor to establish the amount then due or which is to become due³⁸ Where the statute creating a lien in favor of materialmen for material furnished a contractor provides that in no event shall the aggregate amount of liens exceed the contract price of the improvements made, in a proceeding to foreclose a materialman's lien, it is incumbent on plaintiff to show that the amount for which he asserts a lien comes, in whole or in part, within the contract price agreed on between the contractor and the owner of the property improved³⁹

Where the statute requires the owner before payment to the contractor to procure from the contractor a verified statement of the persons furnishing material and labor and the amounts due or to become due to them, it will be presumed, where the subcontractor shows that he has complied with the provisions of the act and that his claim is unpaid, that the owner has not paid the contractor,⁴⁰ and the burden is on the owner to show, if he can, that he has rightfully paid the contractor⁴¹ Under a statute providing that, when work done or material furnished is done or furnished on the employment of the contractor or some person other than the owner, the lien shall attach unless the owner shall produce the sworn statement of the contractor or other person at whose instance the work was done or material was furnished that the agreed price or reasonable value has been paid, a materialman suing to foreclose his lien has the burden of overcoming the prima facie validity of the contractor's affidavit showing that the agreed price or reasonable value thereof has been paid⁴²

In case of a change in statute whereby the owner is made liable if he makes payment to the contractor before the lapse of the period given to subcontractors to file their liens, the burden is on the owner, if he desires to assert that the new statute cannot affect payments before it went into effect, to show the amounts paid by him before and after such time⁴³

Collusion. Where claimant's right to recover depends on the fact that payments by the owner have been made to the contractor in bad faith⁴⁴ or in advance,⁴⁵ the burden of establishing such fact rests on claimant.

Deductions for faulty performance or for cost of completion. The owner has the burden of establishing a counterclaim against the contractor,⁴⁶ or a right to an allowance for damages⁴⁷ Where the contract is abandoned by the principal contractor, complainant is bound to show that a part of the contract price equal to the amount of his claim remains in the owner's hands in excess of the cost of completion,⁴⁸ and, where the owner has completed the contract under a provision allowing him to do so on default of the contractor, claimant must show that there has been negligence in the manner of completion in order to prevent the owner from deducting the actual cost thereof from the money due under the contract.⁴⁹ Where the statute provides that, in case of abandonment by the original contractor, the amount that the work and materials furnished by subcontractors and materialmen are shown to be reasonably worth according to the original contract price less the amount rightfully paid on the original contract and the damages occasioned to the owner by reason of its nonperformance may be applied to the liens of such subcontractors or materialmen, the burden is on the owner to establish his damages, including his right to stipulated damages for delay.⁵⁰

Where the owner has settled with the contractor, it will be presumed in an action by a subcontractor that the owner was allowed at such time whatever he was entitled to because of delay in completion.⁵¹

j. Payment

The burden of establishing payment in a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien generally is on the defendant.

Defendant is usually held to have the burden of establishing a defense of payment in a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien.⁵² However, it has been held that a materialman has the burden of showing a contention that a check given by the owner to the contractor and delivered to the materialman by the contractor was issued to meet the contractor's pay roll rather than to pay for the materials furnished.⁵³

k. Fraud and Bad Faith

In a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, the burden is on the party alleging fraud to establish it.

The burden is on the party alleging fraud to establish it,⁵⁴ as where the owner alleges that claimant in bad faith has included in his statement items which are nonlienable,⁵⁵ or where he asserts a willful intention on the part of claimant to claim for an item known not to have been furnished,⁵⁶ or for an amount known to be in excess of what is justly due.⁵⁷ Fraud will not be presumed.⁵⁸ A fraudulent intent by a subcontractor to manufacture an item of account to extend the time for filing the lien will not be presumed.⁵⁹

It has been held, however, that the burden to establish good faith is on claimant,⁶⁰ as where a particular item is improperly included in the claim or the claim is for an excessive amount.⁶¹

l. Waiver and Estoppel

In a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, the burden rests on the party asserting a waiver of the lien to establish such fact.

Where there has been a compliance with the statutory requirements for the procurement of a lien, the burden rests on one asserting a waiver to establish such fact.⁶² Likewise, the burden of proving an agreement to waive liens is on the person asserting it.⁶³ Where it is claimed that material was furnished to certain houses after they were released from lien, the burden of proof rests on the owner or person seeking to avoid the lien.⁶⁴ Claimant has the burden of showing acts of estoppel whereby a mechanic's lien may attach to property otherwise exempt as a homestead,⁶⁵ and a subcontractor who has failed to file his claim in time must establish an estoppel which he relies on as precluding the owner from taking advantage of his default.⁶⁶ So, where under the statute the owner may be estopped to assert that the lien was not filed within a specified time by his failure to file a statutory notice of completion, claimant to avail himself of such estoppel must prove the facts constituting it.⁶⁷

Claimant ordinarily has the burden of proving that his waiver of the lien was invalid⁶⁸ or inoperative.⁶⁹

m. Priorities

In a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, a claimant who asserts facts to overcome the apparent priority of a mortgage or other encumbrance over his lien has the burden of proof.

A claimant asserting facts overcoming the apparent priority of a mortgage or other encumbrance over his lien has as a general rule the burden of proof,⁷⁰ as, for example, the burden of negating good faith,⁷¹ or of showing actual notice,⁷² although the question may be controlled by the character of the pleadings.⁷³ In a suit to have a mortgage lien declared superior to a mechanic's lien, the burden is on the mechanic's lienor, although a defendant, to prove the commencement of his work prior to the execution of the mortgage.⁷⁴

Subsequent encumbrancers. One who asserts the priority of a mortgage given after work has been begun and material furnished by the lienor to the mortgagee's knowledge on the ground that it was given for the purchase price of the property has the burden of establishing such fact.⁷⁵ One who relies for protection against the mechanic's lien on a proviso withdrawing purchasers for value from the operation thereof, where the lien is not filed within a required time, has the burden of bringing himself within the proviso.⁷⁶

*A waiver of the priority of a mechanic's lien over a subsequently executed deed of trust will not be presumed from a failure to make the assignee of the note secured a party defendant where the lienor was ignorant of the assignment of the note.*⁷⁷

Mechanic's lien claimant's failure to offer evidence that it had no notice or knowledge of conditional sale contract, providing that service and comfort stations, erected by seller on land leased by buyer, should not become fixtures, was not fatal to cause of action to foreclose lien, since burden of showing such notice as an affirmative defense was on defendant seller.—R. evidence in civil actions ordinarily are applicable in proceedings to enforce a mechanic's lien.⁷⁸ Any evidence which is otherwise competent is admissible where it tends to establish claimant's cause of action⁷⁹ or defendant's defense,⁸⁰ but it must not be irrelevant or immaterial.⁸¹ Where the statute requires that an action to enforce the lien must be brought within a certain time after the filing of the claim or, if credit is given, within a certain time after the expiration of such credit, evidence concerning the time for payment is admissible to show that credit was given to the materialman.⁸²

Right to sue. A deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors from the lienor to plaintiff is admissible to show the right of plaintiff to sue, although there is a discrepancy between the amount stated therein and the amount claimed by the assignee.⁸³

Evidence bearing on the question whether work was performed or materials furnished in reliance on the credit of the property is admissible in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien.

In a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, evidence bearing on the question whether work was performed or materials furnished by claimant in reliance on a lien or on the credit of the building or improvement is admissible.⁸⁴ Where defendant denies that the work has been done and materials furnished on the credit of the building, claimant's books of original entry are admissible for the purpose of showing that the charges had been made against the particular building which is the subject of the lien.⁸⁵ On the other hand, declarations of the contractor that materials are purchased for a certain building, although made at the time when they are obtained, are not competent to show as against the owner that the material was sold on the credit of the building.⁸⁶ The fact that a materialman delivered a part of the material on the premises sought to be charged with a lien is not in itself evidence that it was sold to the contractor on the credit of the building.⁸⁷

In a proceeding for the enforcement of a mechanic's lien, evidence bearing on the question of the property or interest subject to the lien is admissible.

In a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, evidence tending to show the quantity of property to which the lien may attach is admissible.⁸⁸ On the question whether a tract of land has been subdivided into lots, the testimony of the owner as to his intention may be considered,⁸⁹ as may evidence of his acts in staking off the lots, or in laying out a street, or conveyances of other lots in the tract.⁹⁰ The deed of conveyance to defendant may be introduced as evidence of ownership,⁹¹ and other evidence bearing on the question which is raised by the pleading and is properly an issue in the proceeding is admissible,⁹² but the ownership involved being that which existed at the time the lien attached, evidence of ownership at time of trial is irrelevant.⁹³

On the other hand, where the title is not in issue under the complaint, defendant's interest only, whatever that may be, being affected by the sale, evidence of an outstanding or paramount title is inadmissible.⁹⁴ If the property has been fraudulently conveyed, the petitioner may treat either the grantor or the grantee as the owner in the foreclosure of his lien, and, if the former, then claimant assumes the burden of showing that the conveyance was fraudulent, and evidence in this behalf is admissible.⁹⁵ As bearing on the question whether the ownership of property is in the wife, a husband may be asked whether he had conveyed the property to her,⁹⁶ but a question as to who prepared the deed is irrelevant.⁹⁷ Where a proper acknowledgment by the husband and wife to the original contract is required by statute before any lien can be established against the homestead, it is error to refuse to permit the husband and wife to introduce evidence that they had not acknowledged the original contract.⁹⁸

In a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, evidence is admissible to prove the amount, value, and kind of material furnished by the claimant.

In a proceeding for the enforcement of a mechanic's lien, claimant may establish the amount, value, and kind of material furnished by him,⁹⁹ and prove that material was purchased for, and was used in, the construction of improvements on the land described.¹ The contractor's receipt for materials is admissible in a suit by the materialman to enforce his lien which arises under the statute merely on furnishing to one who is building for the owner.²

A charge in claimant's book which shows merely a delivery of material to its employee for delivery to defendant at another point is not competent to establish such delivery.³ The declaration of the contractor that materials are purchased for a particular building, although made when they are obtained, is not evidence against the owner of the land of the use of the materials therein.⁴

Material furnished for several buildings Unless there is evidence to show for which one of several buildings materials sold and charged in a joint account were furnished, such account is inadmissible.⁵

e. Agreement or Consent of the Owner

Evidence as to the nature and terms of the contract under which the work was done or materials furnished is admissible in a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien.

In a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, evidence as to the nature and terms of the contract under which the work was done or materials furnished is admissible.⁶ As in other cases evidence is not admissible to contradict or vary the terms of a written contract,⁷ and, where a written contract is not merely collateral and incidental to the issues, but is the basis of the right set up, it must be produced or its absence must be accounted for before secondary evidence of its terms may be received.⁸

Evidence which tends to show that work was done at the request of the owner is admissible,⁹ and, if it appears that the account on plaintiff's books is against the contractor, plaintiff may introduce evidence to explain how this was so consistently with the theory of the owner's direct liability.¹⁰ Bills rendered to one charged with materials may be introduced in evidence as bearing on the issue as to whom the credit was extended, on behalf of defendant to whom such materials were not charged.¹¹ Evidence as to the doing of other work is inadmissible to show employment by defendant to do the particular work for which the recovery is sought ¹²

In an action by a subcontractor or materialman, the contract with the general contractor is admissible in evidence,¹³ and, although a materialman has a direct lien, irrespective of any contract between him and the owner, which arises on furnishing to one having a contract with the owner, evidence of the nature of the contract between the owner and contractor is admissible ¹⁴ The specifications of a contract for the erection of a building are immaterial on the question of whether or not certain work was included, where a materialman dealt directly with the owner who could enlarge or alter the plans as he saw fit ¹⁵ Under an answer denying that a codefendant was contractor or agent, the owner may show that plaintiff was the contractor.¹⁶

Where the contract is with a lessee, claimant is entitled to show that the materials for which he makes a claim of lien were either in whole or in part for the specific work for which the owners had given consent under the terms of the lease ¹⁷ Where the case is tried on the theory that the owner's agent orally authorized the tenant to have the work done, the original contract between the agent and tenant for the lease of the premises is immaterial.¹⁸

Contract with agent. While, as in other cases, the declarations of an alleged agent are not competent to prove his agency,¹⁹ his testimony is competent as to the fact and extent of his agency.²⁰ Where the agency is conceded, the fact of orders by the agent for delivery of material may be shown ²¹ Proof that a defendant contracted as an undisclosed agent for his codefendant has been held inadmissible under an allegation of a joint contract.²²

dence as to the acts and conduct of the husband may be admitted to show his agency in making a contract for repairs on the wife's property.²³

Knowledge and failure to object. If the owner is to be charged by his consent to the work being done, all matters tending to prove his knowledge of the erection of the building are admissible ²⁴

f. Performance of Contract

In a proceeding for the enforcement of a mechanic's lien, evidence is admissible which tends to establish or disprove performance of the contract alleged as the foundation of the lien.

In a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, evidence is admissible which tends to establish²⁵ or to disprove²⁶ performance of the contract alleged as the foundation of the lien ²⁷ On the other hand, evidence is not admissible to show that certain materials used were more suitable than others which the contract required.²⁸ A default judgment in favor of the materialman against the owner is admissible in proceedings to establish a mechanic's lien as against a mortgagee ²⁹

Architect's certificate In an action by a subcontractor, the issuing by the architect to the principal contractor of a certificate as to the completion of certain work, including the work for which the lien was filed by the subcontractor, in order to enable the principal contractor to make a settlement with the owner of the premises, is relevant on the question of performance by the subcontractor, and may be regarded as an admission by the principal contractor and the architect that the contract of the subcontractor has been substantially performed.³⁰

g. Lien Claim, Statement, or Notice

In a proceeding for the enforcement of a mechanic's lien, a notice or claim of lien as required by statute is admissible to show compliance with such requirement.

In a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, a notice or claim of lien as required by the statute is admissible in evidence to show compliance with such requirement³¹. The statement itself is held to be at most only evidence of its filing and of its own contents as touching its own sufficiency³²; it is not in itself competent evidence of the facts required to be stated therein³³ and cannot amount to prima facie proof of such facts³⁴. Under a statute providing that in all suits on account a verified itemized statement of the account may be competent evidence of its correctness, a lien statement cannot be evidence of the value or contract price of the materials furnished or of the value of the building erected where it is not itemized.³⁵

A memorandum not recorded with the lien is not of itself evidence.³⁶ Where there is no issue as to the validity and sufficiency of the lien claim, the original claim is properly excluded from evidence³⁷. The lien claim is not inadmissible because of a defect which merely affects the priority of the lien³⁸.

Record. Where the signature and verification of a lien claim are sufficient to entitle it to be filed with a public officer as required by statute, it becomes a public record and entitled to be received in evidence under the rules relating to such records.³⁹ The record, however, is not competent to prove anything other than could be proved by the claim itself⁴⁰.

Extrinsic evidence. Evidence may be introduced for the purpose of determining the sufficiency of description in the lien claim, including the purpose for which the description is required, and the persons who are to be affected by it.⁴¹ Where, under the statute, a description of the premises in a notice of lien is sufficient if the property can be identified therefrom, an imperfect or improper description of property in a mechanic's lien notice may be aided by extrinsic evidence where proper averments are found in the complaint.⁴² The character of the building and its intended use may be shown to identify the land mentioned in the lien notice.⁴³

Extrinsic evidence cannot be resorted to in order to supply a description omitted from the notice of lien,⁴⁴ and the omission of a statement in the notice of lien of the value or agreed price of the labor performed or materials furnished as required by statute cannot be supplied by extrinsic evidence.⁴⁵ Where an inspection of the lien claim itself presents a doubt as to whether or not it was sworn to by claimant, it is proper to produce proof aliunde that the statement was in fact sworn to.⁴⁶

Service of notice of intention. Claimant is entitled to prove the facts showing or tending to show that notice by a subcontractor of an intention to file a lien was served,⁴⁷ and was served on a person in possession.⁴⁸

Proof of notice. In a suit to establish a lien against a married woman's separate property, her testimony that she received notice of the lien and that her husband acted as her agent respecting it is admissible.⁴⁹

Completion of work or furnishing of material Evidence as to the time of completion of the work or the furnishing of material is admissible on the question of the timely filing of the lien.⁵⁰ Receipts given by the materialman pending delivery of material are admissible on the question whether a debt accrued on the delivery of each item or whether the understanding was that there should be no debt until the entire quantity was delivered.⁵¹ Although a contract may be void under the statute because it is not recorded, it may still be used as evidence to determine the character of the building to be erected and thereby furnish the test by which it can be ascertained when the building was completed.⁵² A statement of account which is not shown to have been rendered to the owner is not admissible to establish the date of completion.⁵³ The itemized lien account is not admissible to show when the last material was furnished.⁵⁴ Where an affidavit for a lien fails to state either the date when the last labor was performed or material furnished, or that it was performed or furnished within the required number of days, the deficiency cannot be supplied by parol evidence.⁵⁵

h. Amount of Claim

Any competent evidence bearing on the proper amount of the claimant's recovery is admissible in a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien.

In a proceeding for the enforcement of a mechanic's lien, any evidence which is otherwise competent is admissible which bears on the proper amount of claimant's recovery.⁵⁶ Where, under the contract, that part of the work and material which is lienable may be definitely distinguished from the rest and the value or price thereof definitely fixed, evidence is admissible for that purpose.⁵⁷ Where, the owner having gone into possession and retained and used the fruit of plaintiff's labor and material, plaintiff is entitled to recover the contract price less the value of the work omitted, he may introduce evidence tending to show the relative proportions and value of the work done and the work omitted.⁵⁸ Estimates of the amount of work done, made by one person, cannot be proved by another person.⁵⁹ In a proceeding against the owner and the contractor, the contract between plaintiff and the contractor is admissible as evidence of the contract price between those parties.⁶⁰ Defendant may show that plaintiff's charges embraced a greater quantity of material than could have been used in the building, where there is a duty on the materialman to inquire into the nature of the building on the credit of which he undertakes to furnish material.⁶¹

Quantum meruit Evidence as to the reasonable value of materials furnished is properly excluded where such value is a matter of special contract provision,⁶³ but, if no more than the contract price is allowed, the admission of such evidence is at most harmless error.⁶⁴ Where the contract is abandoned, defendant may show the value of the work, taking into consideration the contract price, and the sum required to complete the contract.⁶⁵

Book accounts and explanations thereof Claimant's books of original entry are competent evidence of the items and the amount of the debt claimed, and he may show by evidence the other facts which entitle him to recover.⁶⁶ The account as it appears on claimant's books may be ex-

i. Indebtedness of Owner to Contractor

Evidence of the condition of accounts between the owner and contractor is admissible in a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien where the claimant's lien rights depend on the fact that something is due the contractor from the owner.

In a proceeding to foreclose a mechanic's lien, where plaintiff's lien rights depend on the fact that something is due the contractor from the owner at the time it is sought to have the lien attach, as considered supra § 174, the condition of the accounts between the owner and contractor is material, and evidence relating thereto is admissible⁶⁹ Likewise, where under the statute materialmen and subcontractors have a lien only to the extent of the contract price, the owner may show that the contract price has been paid and that plaintiff materialman received his pro rata portion⁷⁰ So, evidence tending to prove other valid liens is admissible as bearing on the amount recoverable by claimant,⁷¹ and, as bearing on the amount for which the owner may be held, he may prove what he has paid to other subcontractors during the time within which they were entitled to file liens⁷² Evidence on the part of the owner that a sum paid by him directly to the principal contractor was used in paying for labor and material is admissible⁷³

In a proceeding by a subcontractor the owner may state that payments made by him were not larger in amount than could properly be considered fair payments for work and materials then actually furnished⁷⁴ In order to defeat an assignment by the contractor made before the notice of liens of subcontractor, it may be shown that there was a partnership between the contractor and his alleged assignee.⁷⁵ Notwithstanding the contract is in writing, parol evidence of what was actually paid the contractor is admissible⁷⁶

Where the lien of a subcontractor, materialman, or laborer is not affected by any payment to the contractor, in an action by a materialman, or the like, to enforce his lien, evidence of payment by the owner to the contractor is inadmissible⁷⁷

Deductions for faulty performance or for cost of completion. Where the contractor has abandoned the work before completion, it is competent, in an action by the subcontractors, for the owner to prove how much of the work the contractor left undone, and what it had cost to complete it in the manner provided by the contract⁷⁸ Where the owner claims damages for defective construction, evidence as to the cost of remedying defects is admissible on the issue of substantial performance⁷⁹ Where it is conceded that the principal contractor has not performed, proof of the negligence of the contractor and the consequent destruction of the building being no dispute as to true date of delivery—Guarenne v Bessemer Lumber Co, 106 So 49, 214 Ala 8

Ledger sheets showing debits and credits of account against defendants were relevant to issue of owners' personal liability—Guarenne v. Bessemer Lumber Co, supra

Time book, kept by timekeeper who entered in time book from day to day number of hours of labor each man performed, was admissible for whatever it showed in relation to number of hours of labor performed by such workers, as against contention that book was inadmissible on ground that it did not show contractors time or material furnished—Dybvig v Willis, 82 P 2d 95, 59 Idaho 160

What constitutes book of original entry

Where mechanic's lien claimant alleged that he delivered, to building, materials described and furnished labor as set forth in exhibit consisting of true and correct copies of claimant's books of original entry, but exhibit did not state days when respective materials were delivered or on which laborers worked, exhibit showed that it was not a copy of "book of original entry" within legal meaning of that term such as could be admitted on trial without other proof of sale and delivery of materials or performance of labor—Hamilton v Means, 38 A 2d 528, 155 Pa Super. 245

may be material as showing that the destruction was not due to the fault of the owner⁸⁰

Evidence that the original contractor after a partial destruction by fire of the building before its completion carried away nearly all of the material on the lot is not admissible as against a materialman, since it does not tend to show the fault of the original contractor in abandoning the contract or that less than the amount claimed by the materialman was due to him⁸¹ Evidence that by plaintiff's delay defendant had lost a tenant is properly excluded where there is no evidence of notice to plaintiff that the building was to be completed by a specified time for occupation by any particular tenant⁸²

j. Payment; Waiver and Estoppel

In a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, any evidence otherwise competent is admissible to show a payment of the claim or a waiver of, or an estoppel to assert, the lien.

In a proceeding for the enforcement of a mechanic's lien, any evidence otherwise competent tending to show a payment of the claim asserted may be admitted⁸³ Evidence may also be admitted to show a waiver⁸⁴ or estoppel to assert⁸⁵ a mechanic's lien The owner's declarations to the lien claimant as to whether the building has been completed are admissible as a foundation of an estoppel to deny the timely filing of the lien⁸⁶ In the absence of an allegation of fraud or mistake, proof of what is said before signature of an absolute and unconditional release of a lien is not admissible⁸⁷ Evidence as to the failure of consideration for an agreement to release and waive a mechanic's lien is admissible notwithstanding the agreement was under seal⁸⁸

k. Fraud and Bad Faith

Evidence bearing on the question of fraud or bad faith is admissible in a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien.

In a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, evidence may be admitted to show fraud or bad faith⁸⁹ or the absence thereof⁹⁰

l. Priorities

Evidence bearing on the question of priorities as between a mechanic's lien and other liens and encumbrances is admissible in a proceeding to enforce the mechanic's lien.

In a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, evidence, which is otherwise competent, is admissible as bearing on the question of priorities as between the mechanic's lien and other liens and encumbrances⁹¹ Where the complaint alleges that defendant took title subject to plaintiff's lien, evidence that defendant's title is derived through foreclosure of a prior mortgage is admissible⁹² to the timely institution of suit⁹⁷ The filing of the lien claim or statement with the proper officer does not establish the lien, but only establishes the fact that a lien is claimed⁹⁸ In some jurisdictions a claimant who has contracted directly with the owner is not required to prove his claim with the same particularity that would be required to sustain a lien filed by a subcontractor,⁹⁹ but in other jurisdictions the contrary has been held¹

Where the proper steps to establish a lien have been taken, a failure of proof as to certain divisible items claimed will not prevent a recovery as to other items²

b. Reliance on Credit of Property

In a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien the evidence must be sufficient to prove that the work was done or the materials furnished in reliance on the credit of the property, where such reliance is an essential basis for the lien

Where, as a basis for a mechanic's lien, it is necessary that the work have been done or materials furnished in reliance on the credit of the property, as considered supra § 46, the evidence in a proceeding to enforce the lien must be sufficient to prove such fact³ The fact that materials are charged to the contractor alone is slight evidence that they are furnished on his credit, but is not prima facie evidence that only the credit of the contractor was relied on⁴ The facts of demand and receipt of a large cash payment, and that certain of the goods have been replevied after delivery to the vendee, are of weight in determining whether the goods were sold on the credit of the building⁵

The method of bookkeeping used by a materialman is not conclusive as showing that credit was given on a general account so as to preclude the assertion of a lien.⁶

c. Property or Interest Subject to Lien

In a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, the evidence must be sufficient to establish the title or interest which it is sought to charge and to show that the premises are such as are subject to the lien.

that the premises are such as are subject to the lien.⁸ It is not necessary that ownership should be proved by the best evidence, or by such evidence as would be admissible in an action to try title.⁹ Inferential proof may be sufficient.¹⁰ A deed conveying the property to defendant a short time before the date of the transaction out of which the lien claim arises, together with a recital in the contract that defendant is the owner, is sufficient evidence of such ownership at the time the contract was made,¹¹ and, if it is shown that the person for whom the work was done is in possession claiming ownership of the property described,¹² or occupies the house as a residence,¹³ or, in the absence of any controversy as to the ownership, that he took possession of the property on completion of the improvements, together with the testimony of witnesses that he owned the property,¹⁴ it will be sufficient evidence of ownership to support a judgment in favor of the lien claimant.

Evidence showing that the lien was not filed against property of defendant, but against other property, supports a judgment for defendant.¹⁵

(5) To show, or to sustain finding, that materials or labor were delivcient for this purpose¹⁷ A prima facie case is made out by a showing that material was contracted for to be used in a proposed building, that it was delivered in pursuance of the contract, and that the building is completed,¹⁸ or by proof that materials were ordered for, furnished for, and delivered at, the building¹⁹ So evidence that material of the same character was used in the building may constitute prima facie proof that the material furnished was used²⁰ The fact that materials sold were of the kind used in a structure such as that on which the materialman claims a lien is insufficient to prove that the materials were used therein,²¹ nor is it sufficient to show that the materialman shipped the materials to the contractor²² The fact that certain witnesses describe a building by the name by which it is sometimes known will not preclude its identity being sufficiently established by other evidence²³

Material furnished for several buildings. Where the materials sold are charged to the contractor in a general account and delivered to different houses, the evidence must be sufficient to identify the material used in the premises against which the lien is sought²⁴

The evidence must be sufficient to establish a contention that the husband of a married woman acted as her agent.³⁴ Proof of the relationship of husband and wife, and that work was done and material furnished to improve real estate belonging to the wife, without more, is not sufficient evidence to establish the fact that she is an undisclosed principal and the husband merely her agent,³⁵ but only slight evidence of the husband's agency is required

Knowledge and failure to object. Where the lien is based on the knowledge of the owner to the furnishing of the material or the making of improvements and his failure to object, such facts must be established by the evidence⁴⁴. Consent of the owner may be shown, however, by his acts and declarations,⁴⁵ or by his knowledge without objection on his part that the improvements are being made, from which his consent may be inferred,⁴⁶ but the facts from which the inference of a consent is to be drawn must be such as to indicate at least a willingness on the part of the owner to have the improvements made, or an acquiescence on his part in the means adopted for that purpose, with knowledge of the object for which they are employed⁴⁷

f. Performance of Contract

The performance of the contract to the extent required to support a mechanic's lien must be sufficiently established in a proceeding to enforce the lien.

The evidence in a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien must be sufficient to show performance of the contract to the extent required to support the lien⁴⁸. The general rules as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence have been applied with respect to proof of such matters as substantial performance,⁴⁹ performance to the satisfaction of defendant,⁵⁰ acceptance of work,⁵¹ defective materials or work,⁵² and such general rules have been applied with

g. Lien Claim, Statement, or Notice

In a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, the evidence must be sufficient to support a finding that the lien claim, statement, or notice was filed or served within the time prescribed by statute.

In a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, the evidence must be sufficient to support a finding that a lien notice was given or claim or statement filed such as the statute requires⁶² or that it was served as the statute provides⁶³. Where the statute requires that a notice be given to the owner by persons other than the contractor as a preliminary step in the perfection of a lien, as considered supra §§ 120-129, the evidence must be sufficient to show that the required notice was given⁶⁴. An officer's return indorsed upon the notice showing service is prima facie⁶⁵ and sufficient⁶⁶ proof of service unless impeached for fraud or mistake⁶⁷.

tween the mechanic's lien and other liens or encumbrances must be established by a sufficiency of the evidence.¹⁶ In various cases the evidence has been held sufficient or insufficient with respect to priority between a mechanic's lien and other liens, claims, and encumbrances,¹⁷ such as other mechanic's liens,¹⁸ mortgages,¹⁹ security²⁰ or trust²¹ deeds, or vendor's liens.²²

Clear and positive evidence by a purchaser at a mortgage foreclosure sale that he had no knowledge of any unrecorded materialman's claims outweighs uncertain and indefinite testimony that such information was given to him by claimant's agent and supports a judgment denying priority of the mechanic's lien.²³

D TRIAL OR HEARING

The trial or hearing in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien should be confined to the issues, and no hearing need be had on matters not in issue.

General rules as to trial apply in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien,²⁴ and where the proceeding is regarded as an equitable one, as discussed supra § 264, the course of procedure as far as it relates to the mode of trial is in accordance with the practice in equity except in so far as modified by statute.²⁵ Where legal and equitable jurisdiction is exercised by the same tribunal, the issues, whether of fact or at law, are tried by the court as an issue in the action.²⁶ A notice of trial required by a local statute is necessary in order to bring the issues involved regularly to trial.²⁷

Ordinarily, the trial or hearing extends and is confined to the issues,²⁸ and no hearing need be had

Time for removal of building

Question of what constitutes reasonable time for removal of building on sale to satisfy mechanic's lien depends on particular circumstances as to which parties have right to be heard—English v Olympic Auditorium, 52 P 2d 267, 10 Cal App 2d 196

as to matters not in issue²⁹ A trial on an issue of fact may not be had while no disposition has been made of an issue of law presented by a demurrer to the complaint³⁰ Where there is an issue of fact involved, the court may not enter a decree without having testimony, even though defendant should not contest³¹ It is sufficient that the judge tries and disposes of all questions necessary to be tried to enable him to dispose of the action³² A contractor suing the owner may waive his mechanic's lien at the trial and rely on the common-law right to a general judgment³³

Time of trial and continuance It is substantial error to force a defendant, over his objection, into a trial at a term prior to that at which the action first becomes triable³⁴ The hearing may be postponed from time to time,³⁵ and the court may grant a continuance for the purpose of bringing in parties not served³⁶

Submission of issues to jury. Some statutes specifically authorize a trial by jury of issues of fact arising in the action³⁷ Under such a statute, either party may demand the submission of issues of fact to a jury,³⁸ but, in the absence of such demand, the court may determine the issues,³⁹ or may refer such issues of fact to a jury as it may deem proper.⁴⁰

Reception of evidence and objections thereto Evidence that is proper to be received may be introduced out of its regular order, at the discretion of the trial judge,⁴¹ but incompetent evidence is properly excluded⁴² A motion to reopen a case to permit the introduction of further evidence in the cause is addressed to the sound discretion of the court⁴³ So, it is within the discretion of the trial court to permit plaintiff to offer additional evidence after defendant has moved for a nonsuit,⁴⁴ or to permit plaintiffs to testify in rebuttal contradicting defendant's contention that plaintiffs had waived their right to a lien⁴⁵ After verdict finding the amount of indebtedness, it is not error to admit evidence as to the lien, etc., since the existence of the lien and priorities of the lienholders are questions for the court⁴⁶ The general rule is applied that in order to show error objections to evidence must be made when it is offered, and must be specific⁴⁷ An alleged variance between the evidence and claim must be specifically pointed out in the trial court⁴⁸

§ 312. References

Ordinarily, in a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, a reference will not be ordered of the main issue in the case, but a reference may usually be had to take proofs, state accounts, and ascertain and report particular facts.

Under the rules applicable to equitable actions generally, a reference will not ordinarily be ordered for the trial of the main issue in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien,⁴⁹ and, where the answer substantially denies every material allegation of the bill and no proof is taken thereafter to sustain the bill, it is improper to refer the cause to a commissioner to enable plaintiff to make out his case⁵⁰ Also, in jurisdictions where an action to foreclose

a mechanic's lien is regarded as an action at law, a compulsory order of reference to determine issues of law and fact may not be made.⁵¹ As in other cases, however, reference may be had in mechanics' lien proceedings to referees, auditors, masters, and the like, to take proofs, state accounts, and ascertain and report particular facts.⁵² Under a statute conforming the practice in mechanics' lien proceedings to that in actions on contract, a provision of a practice act authorizing the reference of an account is applicable.⁵³ After submission to a referee to hear and determine an issue, the lien cannot be discharged on an application based on ex parte affidavits touching the merits.⁵⁴ The fact that an order of reference is excessively broad in its terms is not necessarily fatal to the validity of the proceeding where the court amplified the referee's findings by findings of its own.⁵⁵

Powers and duties of referee, fees A referee in a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien ordinarily has no powers except those conferred on him by the appointment.⁵⁶ He cannot delegate any of his powers to others,⁵⁷ and his authority terminates when he makes and files his decision.⁵⁸ Accordingly, after signing his decision he has no jurisdiction to take any further action,⁵⁹ and his acts of signing the final judgment of foreclosure⁶⁰ and appointing a referee to sell the property⁶¹ are superfluous and unauthorized. The allowance and pay-

Hearing and notice. On a reference to ascertain claims and report on liens and their priorities, the parties are entitled to notice of the time and place for the hearing of proofs,⁶³ but one who suffers a petition to be taken as confessed is not entitled to notice of the taking of testimony before the master.⁶⁴

Report and findings General rules applicable to a master's report or findings, as discussed in Equity §§ 539-543, or to the report or findings of a referee, as considered in the C J S title References §§ 111-149, also 53 C J p 743 note 72-p 768 note 41, govern the report or findings of referees and the like in mechanic's lien proceedings.⁶⁵ It has been held that a referee's report in compliance with the statute is prima facie evidence of the facts therein found and reported.⁶⁶ Where the complaint alleges that claimant was prevented by certain causes from full performance of his contract, a referee's report finding that plaintiff did not complete his contract should find also the ultimate facts as to whether the failure to complete was due to the causes alleged.⁶⁷ Where the finding clearly indicates the amount due on the lienor's contract, a failure to find such amount in terms is not necessarily fatal.⁶⁸

Exceptions A party desiring to except to the report must do so at the proper time.⁶⁹ A general exception that the report is contrary to evidence is sufficient in a case where the report itself is general.⁷⁰ One who allows the petition to be taken as confessed must except to the master's report if he desires to question the master's conclusions of fact contained therein.⁷¹ It has been held that a court rule requiring exceptions to a referee's report to be made in the first instance at special term does not apply to a reference in mechanics' lien proceedings.⁷² Where the decree is in effect a ruling on the exceptions to the master's report, the failure to make a formal order disposing of them is not harmful.⁷³ Where exceptions have been filed to the referee's report awarding payments to certain lienholders, the owner makes payment before confirmation of the report at his own risk.⁷⁴

Resubmission Where otherwise proper, the granting of a motion to recommit for further proof is discretionary with the court.⁷⁵ A resubmission will not be granted because of a dispute as to an item as to which evidence was completely available at the time of the original hearing before the referee.⁷⁶ Advantage may not be taken of the failure of the referee to find whether an overstatement was innocent or with an intent to deceive in the absence of a motion to recommit.⁷⁷ This, also, is true of a failure to apportion damages for defective work and materials between several subcontractors whose work is found to be improperly done.⁷⁸

Conclusiveness and effect Where an order of reference is properly made, findings of the referee, it has been held, stand as the findings of the court,⁷⁹ and the referee's decision as to a mixed question of law and fact will not be disturbed in the absence of a misapplication of the law.⁸⁰ Where a reference by agreement is entered into by the parties, in which they submit all matters in controversy, a question of law and fact not raised by proper plea or before the referee cannot be raised thereafter.⁸¹ Where interveners have stipulated in an order of reference that the amount due from defendants under the contract shall constitute the fund to be divided, they cannot object to a deduction of damages for delay as provided for in the contract.⁸²

In a proper case a commissioner may be appointed by the court to survey or ascertain the boundaries of the premises on which a lien is claimed.

§ 314. Questions of Law and Fact

- a In general
- b Particular questions

a. In General

In proceedings to enforce mechanics' liens, questions of law are for the determination of the court, while issues of fact are to be determined by the jury or the trial court sitting without a jury.

In a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, as in other civil actions, questions of law are for the determination of the court,⁸⁴ while questions of fact are to be determined by the jury,⁸⁵ or, where the case is tried without a jury, by the court.⁸⁶ Accordingly where there is evidence tending to support claimants' cause, notwithstanding there may be evidence to the contrary, the questions so raised must be left to the triers of the facts,⁸⁷ and this is

b. Particular Questions

- (1) In general
- (2) Lienable character of claim
- (3) Agreement or consent of owner
- (4) Performance of contract
- (5) Lien, claim, statement, or notice
- (6) Amount and payment

(1) In General

In proceedings to enforce mechanics' liens, questions relating to the existence of the debt or lien and other particular questions have been held to be questions of fact for the triers thereof, but the question whether respondents are proper parties has been held to be one of law.

Under the rule discussed supra subdivision a of this section that questions of law are for the determination of the court and questions of fact are for the jury in proceedings for the enforcement of mechanics' liens, numerous particular questions have been held to be questions of fact for the triers thereof,⁹³ such as questions relating to the existence of the debt⁹⁴ or lien,⁹⁵ the correctness of an account for material furnished,⁹⁶ whether or not claimant has performed those things that bring him within the statutory provisions creating a lien,⁹⁷ the terms of an oral agreement,⁹⁸ whether contractors guaranteed the total cost of the construction,⁹⁹ or whether notice of nonresponsibility had been properly posted.¹ The question whether respondents are proper parties is one of law,² but it is a question of fact whether they are nonresidents who may be served by publication.³

Reliance on credit of property On conflicting evidence, the question whether materials were furnished on the credit of the contractor or of the improvement is one of fact.⁴ Accordingly, it has been held that a sale of materials to a contractor on the usual terms of credit does not, as a matter of law, prevent the lien from attaching.⁵

Property or interest subject to lien Where the lien extends to the land necessary for the convenient use and occupation of the buildings and improvements made, the question of the extent of such land is one of fact,⁶ but the question whether a particular building is such as is subject to a mechanic's lien is one of law.⁷ Whether a structure is a single or a double building, or one building or two, is a mixed question of law and fact.⁸

Delivery and use of material On conflicting evidence, it is a question of fact whether material furnished by claimant was used in the work,⁹ as is the question of what materials could have been used in the building.¹⁰

Fraud and bad faith An issue as to good faith¹¹ or fraud¹² ordinarily presents a question of fact, as does the question whether an omission of a credit was willful or fraudulent,¹³ or knowing or willful.¹⁴

Waiver and estoppel A question of waiver¹⁵ or estoppel¹⁶ is ordinarily one of fact, as for example, a question whether an owner agreed that the lien should be filed, although a general contractor had agreed that no lien should be filed.¹⁷

Priorities Where there is a dispute as to the facts, the question of priority in mechanic's lien proceedings is one of fact for the jury.¹⁸ On the other hand, in the absence of a dispute as to the facts, it is a question of law whether a mortgage has priority over a mechanic's lien.¹⁹

(2) Lienable Character of Claim

tion whether the claim is one for which a lien may be had is one of fact, where the evidence is conflicting as to the character of the claim.

In a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, on conflicting evidence as to the character of the claim, the question whether the claim is one for which a lien may be had is one of fact.²⁰ So it is a question of fact whether there was a substantially new construction or mere repair of an old building,²¹ or whether a particular improvement is or is not a constituent part of a building where it is not admittedly or palpably so,²² but, if the facts are ascertained or admitted, the question whether the improvement constitutes a new structure is for the court.²³ Whether the materials are so applied to a building as to become a part thereof,²⁴ or whether under particular circumstances a machine became a permanent addition to the freehold so as to be a fixture for manufacturing purposes within the meaning of the lien law,²⁵ is a question of fact for the jury.

(3) Agreement or Consent of Owner

In an action for foreclosure of a mechanic's lien, the question of agreement or consent on the part of the owner ordinarily presents a question of fact, where the evidence is conflicting.

In an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien, the question of agreement or consent on the part of the owner ordinarily presents on conflicting evidence a question of fact,²⁶ as, for example, in the case of a controverted agency of a husband for a wife,²⁷ or of assent by the owner to an improvement by a contractual vendee²⁸ or by a tenant,²⁹ but, where the question of agency depends on the construction of undisputed writings, it is a question of law for the court³⁰

It is a question of fact whether the owner agreed to pay the materialman,³¹ whether the original contract has been waived and a new one substituted,³² whether a contract between the owner and builder was at an end when the materials for which the lien is claimed were furnished the latter,³³ or in what kind of pay, cash, or property the contractor was to be paid³⁴ In an action by a materialman a denial by the contractor of the contract raises an issue of fact³⁵

(4) Performance of Contract

Ordinarily the question whether there has been a performance of the contract is one of fact in a suit to enforce a mechanic's lien

Ordinarily, in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien, it is a question of fact whether there has been a substantial performance of the contract,³⁶ or whether it has been performed according to its terms,³⁷ or whether imperfections are trivial,³⁸ or whether contractual provisions have been waived.³⁹ It is also a question of fact whether work has been accepted,⁴⁰ or whether performance was abandoned,⁴¹ or whether discontinuance or withdrawal was caused by acts of defendant⁴² However, the facts may show as a matter of law that performance was not substantial⁴³ or that the owner is not entitled to counterclaim for damages because of faulty performance⁴⁴ Whether an assignee who is also surety on the contractor's bond is finishing the building as assignee or on his individual credit presents a question of fact⁴⁵

(5) Lien, Claim, Statement, or Notice

In a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, it is a question of fact whether the lien has been perfected within the time required by law, where the evidence is conflicting on such issue

In a suit to enforce a mechanic's lien, it is a question of fact whether a lien has been perfected within the time required by law where the evidence is conflicting or there is some evidence tending to support this issue⁴⁶ Questions of fact are also presented by conflicting evidence as to matters entering into timeliness of the filing,⁴⁷ as, for example, the time when the work was commenced,⁴⁸ the date of the completion of the work⁴⁹ or the final furnishing of the materials,⁵⁰ whether all the materials furnished by claimant were used in the work,⁵¹ whether work was done or material furnished under one contract or under separate contracts,⁵² whether items were furnished as an independent transaction,⁵³ or whether the work last done or materials last furnished were under the original contract,⁵⁴ or were done or furnished in good faith for the purpose of completing the contract,⁵⁵ or colorably to revive the lien or to extend the time for filing⁵⁶ On the other hand, where the evidence is undisputed, the timeliness of the filing of the lien is a matter of law for the court⁵⁷

By statute it is sometimes provided that it shall be a question of fact whether the lien account as filed is sufficient to charge the owner or his agent with knowledge of the amount for which, and the work and labor done or materials furnished for which, a lien is claimed⁵⁸ Such a statute is not retroac-

Description or identity of property. What land is covered by the lien claim,⁶⁰ the identification of the property from the description given,⁶¹ and the sufficiency of the description to identify the property⁶² ordinarily are questions of fact for the jury

(6) Amount and Payment

In a suit to enforce a mechanic's lien, on conflicting evidence, the amount and payment of the claim are questions of fact.

Where the evidence concerning the amount of the claim is conflicting, the question is one of fact, in a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien⁶³ The same is true as to controverted questions as to the amount due the principal contractor,⁶⁴ or whether there has been an equitable distribution of the lien claim among several buildings,⁶⁵ or whether an architect's certificate for enough to pay a materialman was given⁶⁶ or was unreasonably withheld⁶⁷ So, where the contract is uncertain, the question whether certain work or materials are extras is one of fact ⁶⁸

Payment Where the evidence is conflicting, it is a question of fact whether payment has been made ⁶⁹ However, if the evidence discloses no submissible issue, the question of payment is one of law for the court ⁷⁰ Particular questions in connection with payment have been held to be questions of fact, ⁷¹ such as credits claimed by defendant, ⁷² whether payments made should have been applied to the lien account, ⁷³ and whether a note ⁷⁴ and mortgage ⁷⁵ were given and accepted in payment of the debt Likewise, it has been held a question of fact whether a certificate of stock was accepted in payment at its face or fair market value ⁷⁶

Instructions in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien must not be misleading or inconsistent, and must enunciate the principles of law applicable to the issues under the pleadings and the evidence

The rules applicable to instructions in civil actions generally apply where a jury trial is, under the practice prevailing in the particular jurisdiction, had in mechanics' lien proceedings ⁷⁷ Instructions must not be misleading ⁷⁸ or inconsistent, ⁷⁹ and must enunciate the principles of law applicable to the issues under the pleadings and the evidence, ⁸⁰ and governing the whole case so presented ⁸¹ The instruction should not proceed on a theory or submit issues not warranted by the pleadings and the evidence, ⁸² nor should they exclude issues supported by the pleadings and evidence, ⁸³ but it has been held that a correct statement of law embraced in a charge to the jury is not erroneous, because the court failed in the same connection to give to the jury other appropriate instructions ⁸⁴

An instruction assuming a material fact which it is the province of the jury to find is erroneous, ⁸⁵ as well as an instruction which authorizes a finding without reference to a material fact as to which there is competent evidence in the record, ⁸⁶ or an instruction which ignores a statutory requirement for the acquisition of a lien and permits a recovery on a finding of facts which falls short of those necessary to the lien right.⁸⁷ However, the instructions need not submit to the consideration of the jury matters about which there is no controversy,⁸⁸ and, if the evidence on a material issue is uncontradicted, it is proper to instruct the jury to find the issue in accordance with such evidence if they believe it.⁸⁹ An instruction which places the burden of proof on the wrong party,⁹⁰ or which imposes too great a burden of proof on a party,⁹¹ is erroneous.

§ 316. Verdict and Findings

- a In general
- b Sufficiency
- c Conclusiveness

a. In General

Where the proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien is in equity, the court must make findings of fact and conclusions of law as a basis for the judgment to be entered.

Where the proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien is in equity as discussed supra § 264, the court must make findings of fact and conclusions of law as a basis for the judgment to be entered.⁹² While it may be discretionary with the court to submit to the jury proper interrogatories from which the jury may make special findings of fact, such findings are advisory only to the court, as considered infra subdivision c of this section, and, if the jury fail to find on each material issue raised in the pleadings, it is the duty of the court to make findings of fact covering such issues and thereafter to make conclusions of law supported by the findings of fact.⁹³ Accordingly, it has been held that a judgment cannot be entered on a general verdict found by the jury.⁹⁴ However, where there is a trial by jury as in ordinary actions, and the statute does not require special findings in such cases, a general verdict has been held sufficient.⁹⁵

Where the purpose of a suit to foreclose a ma-

terialman's lien is merely to establish absolutely a special lien against the property involved, and the suit is not one in personam, no general verdict may be obtained against the owner.⁹⁶ Where the proceeding is in form an action for the debt and to establish a lien for the amount claimed to be due, a general verdict for plaintiff, finding the amount of the debt, will not support a judgment awarding a lien where the existence of the lien is in issue.⁹⁷ Where the statute provides that, if the lien is allowed, the verdict shall set it forth, a verdict finding for plaintiffs in a specified sum without reference to any lien cannot stand where the petition prays for no relief except that the petitioners' lien be set up and established,⁹⁸ although, where the complaint contains a prayer for general judgment as well as for the declaration of a lien, a general verdict against defendant may be had.⁹⁹

Resubmission After a hearing has been had and the court has disposed of the findings and requests to find, a motion to reopen the case in order to submit further findings for the purpose of recovering judgment on notes given by the owner to the contractor may properly be denied.¹

(1) In General

The findings in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien must establish the facts necessary to the support of the judgment.

General rules apply to the sufficiency of the verdict and findings in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien.² Facts must be found as such, as in other cases, and, if cast among conclusions of law, the finding cannot be considered to supply any defect in the special findings of facts.³ Findings which establish the facts necessary to the support of the judgment are sufficient⁴ The court must ascertain such facts as the particular statute requires,⁵ and the findings must show the existence of the conditions which, under the statute, justify the conclusion of the validity of the lien claimed,⁶ such, for example, as that the work or material was furnished under a contract with the owner,⁷ that the owner had knowledge or notice of improvements being made,⁸ that materials were furnished for the purpose of being used in the particular building,⁹ or that they were so used,¹⁰ that the statutory notice was given,¹¹ and the price or value of the work or material¹²

It is not necessary or proper that the finding should narrate the evidence on which the result is based,¹³ and, where the facts on which a lien is claimed are found by the jury, the verdict need not find that claimant is entitled to a lien¹⁴ It has been held, however, that it is the better practice for the verdict to show a distinct finding by the jury that plaintiff is entitled to a lien and to a given amount¹⁵ Special findings must cover all the facts essential to plaintiff's recovery under the issues tendered by his complaint.¹⁶ For example, they must find that defendants are the owners of the property which it is sought to reach¹⁷ Where defendant's contention is that claimant agreed to take his pay in property, the jury, if they find in favor of such contention, should find the fact specially¹⁸ The cost of completion after abandonment by the contractor, being merely evidentiary of the value of work done and material furnished at the time of abandonment, need not be specifically found¹⁹ A verdict finding a lien need not direct a foreclosure²⁰

Priority In order to give a mechanic's lien priority over an unrecorded mortgage it must be found as a fact that claimants had no notice of its existence at the time when they performed the labor or began to furnish material²¹ Under a statute giving the mechanic a lien superior to a prior mortgage as to the improvements and second as to the land, the court must find the value of the land and of the improvements separately.²²

and must respond to the issues made in the case,²⁴ and a request by defendant for a finding which is not within any of the issues made by the pleadings may properly be refused.²⁵ Where several lien claims are consolidated, the decision is made as if the cause of action was presented in a single complaint,²⁶ and is to be embodied in a single set of findings in which all the facts in issue in the consolidated action are to be incorporated.²⁷ In such case an issue as to the extent of land essential for the convenient use and occupation of the building affects the rights of each of claimants,²⁸ and its presentation in any of the original complaints brings it in issue in the consolidated action, so that the finding operates in favor of all plaintiffs, although some may not have tendered the particular issue in their complaints.²⁹ A variance between the findings and the complaint is not fatal where it is not of a character to show that the party has been misled.³⁰

A verdict in excess of the amount authorized by the evidence cannot be sustained.³¹ The findings must not permit a double recovery.³²

(3) Definiteness and Certainty

The verdict or findings in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien, must be reasonably certain and definite in the finding of particular facts.

The verdict or findings in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien must be reasonably certain and definite in the finding of particular facts.³³ However, the general rule that uncertainties in the findings will be resolved if reasonably possible so as to support the judgment has been applied with respect to uncertainty in the findings as to the use of the materials in the premises on which the lien is claimed,³⁴ or as to fraud or dishonesty on the part of defendant's engineer in making estimates and classifications,³⁵ or as to when the owner obtained knowledge of improvements being made on his premises,³⁶ or as to the present ownership of the property sought to be subjected.³⁷ Where the right to the lien depends on the doing of a particular thing within a definite number of days after a certain event, a finding that it was done "on or about" a certain day has been held to be insufficient.³⁸

(4) Contradictory Findings

The findings of fact on which foreclosure of a mechanic's lien is decreed must be consistent with themselves and with the theory of the case as made by the pleadings.

ent with a finding of performance,⁴⁰ and, where the statute provides that certain acts by the owner shall be deemed the equivalent of completion of the building, findings that there have been a deemed completion and an actual completion of the same building are not inconsistent.⁴¹ The finding by the court of the ultimate fact that the work was completed within the time required by the statute for the filing of a lien controls an error in a specific date in the finding.⁴²

(5) Construction and Interpretation

Findings of fact in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien will be reasonably interpreted and construed according to their evident import.

The general rules applicable to construction and interpretation of verdicts and findings apply in proceedings to enforce mechanic's liens.⁴³ Findings of facts made by the trial court must be construed together in determining their sufficiency.⁴⁴ A finding will be reasonably interpreted and construed according to its evident import, although it may be informal,⁴⁵ and the answer of a jury to an issue will be considered in connection with the instruction submitting it⁴⁶ or with other findings and the conceded facts,⁴⁷ and, if the finding as made is to all intents and purposes equivalent to that required, it will be sufficient.⁴⁸

Under the general rule that, where a verdict is susceptible of two constructions, it will be given the one which will uphold it, a finding in a verdict as to the date from which interest runs will not be allowed to overcome a finding that the suit was commenced in time.⁴⁹ It will be presumed in support of a judgment in the absence of evidence as to the size of the lot on which a building is located that all of it is necessary for the convenient use and occupation of the building.⁵⁰ A finding that a lot is not susceptible of division is not an indirect finding that an older building on the lot is appurtenant to the one on which the lien is claimed.⁵¹ Where no issue is submitted to the jury as to the abandonment of the contract by claimant, a finding that a specific amount was due is inconsistent with an abandonment.⁵²

c. Conclusiveness

Where a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien is tried by the court without a jury as an action at law, the findings, if supported by the evidence, are conclusive, but in an equitable proceeding the verdict on issues submitted is advisory only.

As a general rule, verdicts and findings of fact are of the same effect in mechanic's lien foreclosure proceedings as in other cases.⁵³ In actions at law tried by the court, sitting as a jury, the court's findings, if supported by substantial evidence, are conclusive,⁵⁴ but in an equitable proceeding the verdict

In suit to foreclose a mechanic's lien for improvements on land set apart to defendant as a probate homestead, defendant's conclusion that she had no interest in land, which was part of her husband's estate, on date of commencement of work of making improvements could not overcome specific finding that plaintiff had a valid lien upon property, which finding was supported by statutory rule that defendant, as husband's widow, on day of death of husband took title to land either under husband's will or by operation of law—MacQuiddy v Rice, 118 P 2d 853, 47 Cal App 2d 755

E. JUDGMENT OR DECREE

§ 317. Nature as in Rem or in Personam

A judgment or decree in a mechanic's lien proceeding, in so far as it declares and authorizes the enforcement of a lien on the property involved, is to be regarded as a judgment in rem against the specific property; a judgment in personam only, and not in rem, is not sufficient to establish the lien.

A judgment or decree in a mechanic's lien proceeding, in so far as it declares and authorizes the enforcement of a lien on the property involved, is to be regarded as a judgment in rem⁵⁸ against the specific property,⁵⁹ a judgment in personam only, and not in rem, is not sufficient to establish the lien.⁶⁰ Although the decree must be in rem, and not in personam, it may direct a sale unless the amount found due is paid on or before a day named,⁶¹ or the statement of the amount due may be in the form of a personal judgment, where the judgment proceeds to declare a lien and direct the taking of the proper steps to make the amount out of the property subject thereto.⁶² Likewise, a provision for the entry of a deficiency judgment, in case the proceeds of sale are not sufficient to pay the claims for which judgment is rendered, does not alter the character of the judgment to a purely personal one.⁶³

It has been held that the judgment must be special⁶⁴ even though the claim arises directly on an original contract between plaintiff and the owner of the property.⁶⁵ However, there is also authority for the view that the judgment may be either general or special or both.⁶⁶ Under some statutory provisions a judgment enforcing a mechanic's lien must be against the debtor, as in ordinary cases, with the addition that, if no sufficient property of the debtor can be found to satisfy such judgment and costs of suit, then the residue thereof shall be levied on the property charged with the lien,⁶⁷ and under these provisions, where such addition is not embodied in the judgment, it is fatally defective.⁶⁸

Jurisdiction of court

Where there has not been a strict compliance with a statutory requirement as to notice of the commencement of an action to enforce a mechanic's lien, it has been held that the court has no jurisdiction to enter a default in the action—Jones & Magee Lumber Co v Boggs, 19 NW 678, 63 Iowa 589

Insufficient affidavit of defense

Under a statute so providing, a judgment may be entered because of an insufficient affidavit of defense to scire facias sur mechanic's lien, but the court alone, and not plaintiff's attorney, may direct entry of judgment on precept or rule for judgment because of insufficient affidavit

ing is not an action for the recovery of money or damages only within the meaning of a statute permitting the entry of a default judgment by the clerk ⁷⁰

A judgment by default against defendant while his demurrer to the complaint is undisposed of is erroneous ⁷¹ So, where an affidavit of defense is on file, judgment may not be entered for plaintiff in disregard of such affidavit on the ground that it was improperly filed, ⁷² and, under the practice in a particular jurisdiction, a lienor who has answered but has not appeared at the trial may not be regarded as in default where a trial notice has not been served ⁷³ It has been held that a judgment by default, for want of an affidavit of defense against the owner, should be interlocutory only where the contractor defends on the ground that the work was done and materials furnished on his credit and not on the credit of the building, and judgment entered in such case against the owner for the debt will be opened ⁷⁴

Amount of judgment Where a statute so authorizes, an assessment of damages on default may be made by the clerk ⁷⁵ Where a contractor makes a default, judgment against him should be for the amount prayed, notwithstanding as against the owner no judgment may be rendered for the claim by reason of the fact that the materialman has applied payment from a fund coming from the owner to material furnished for other buildings ⁷⁶

The plaintiff must make such proof as is required by the statutes and rules of practice on default in a mechanic's lien proceeding.

In the absence of a specific statutory provision, it would seem that, on a default, plaintiff need make such proof only as is required in other cases on default, ⁷⁷ and a general statute providing that plaintiff may take a verdict on default as though the allegations of the complaint were established by testimony has been held to apply to a mechanic's lien proceeding ⁷⁸ Where the chancery practice is established in lien cases, the court may proceed to a decree on bill confessed, with or without evidence to support the bill, as the court shall in its discretion deem best, as provided by a statute relating to chancery practice ⁷⁹ Where answers are filed denying the allegations of the complaint, defendants are entitled to a trial of the issues presented by the pleadings, even though they fail to appear when the case is regularly called for trial, and the court may give judgment in such case only on proof of the facts alleged in the complaint and denied by the answers ⁸⁰

c. Opening

Where a statute so provides, a default entered in a mechanic's lien proceeding may be opened and the defendant permitted to defend

A general statute under which the court may permit defendant to defend within a stated time after judgment, where the summons is not personally served on him, has been held to apply to suits to foreclose mechanics' liens, ⁸¹ and under such a statute the court may impose terms incident to permitting defendant to defend, ⁸² but the terms should not be unreasonable and harsh ⁸³ Under such a statute, where the court imposes unreasonable and harsh terms, in an order permitting defendant to file an answer and defend the suit the terms will be regarded as surplusage and without legal effect. ⁸⁴ Also, under such a statute the court may not make the order opening the default conditional on such unknown terms as another court, at the time of the trial of the suit on the merits, may fix ⁸⁵ Under a general provision of a statute relating to proceedings in chancery allowing defendant to appear and answer within a certain time after default and de-

§ 319. Requisites and Essentials in General

- a. In general
- b. Definiteness and certainty
- c. Parties generally
- d. Scope and extent of relief

a. In General

A judgment or decree in a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien must conform to such requirements as are imposed by the statutory provisions on which the proceeding is based.

A judgment or decree in a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien must conform to such requirements as are imposed by the statutory provisions on which the proceeding is based,⁸⁷ since the lien is dependent for operation and effect on the rendition of a judgment such as the statute directs.⁸⁸ An order foreclosing a mechanic's lien without finding that the party who contracted with the lien claimant for the improvement represented the owner of the fee,⁸⁹ or not finding whether a copy of a notice claimed to have been posted on the premises by the owner of the fee was served on the lien claimant,⁹⁰ has been held incomplete. Under some statutory provisions, where a referee has completed the performance of his duties and filed his decision, judgment may be entered on his decision without further warrant by the clerk as a ministerial act.⁹¹ A judgment for plaintiff in a mechanic's lien proceeding, where the record shows that the proceeding was not filed within the statutory time therefor, has been held void on its face.⁹²

ey a lien on the realty of the party against whom it was rendered for a stated period, a judgment may be entered on a verdict for claimant in a mechanic's lien action at any time within the period of limitations without loss of the lien,⁹³ and where plaintiff in a scire facias on a mechanic's lien has obtained a verdict within the period of limitations from the issuing of the writ, but is prevented from entering judgment until after the expiration of that period, by reason of the pending of a rule for a new trial or a motion in arrest of judgment, he is entitled to judgment on the discharge of the rule or motion.⁹⁴ A statutory provision requiring diligence in the prosecution of the proceeding within a prescribed time after the issuance of the summons does not prescribe a time after which a judgment may not be entered,⁹⁵ and a provision limiting the period during which the lien may remain in force before action brought does not require that the action shall be prosecuted to final judgment within the time so limited, and if the action is brought within the time the judgment may be taken after the time has expired.⁹⁶

b. Definiteness and Certainty

A judgment or decree in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien must be specific and certain or capable of being made such by proper construction.

A judgment or decree in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien must be specific and certain or capable of being made such by proper construction, it should be definite as to the amount of recovery allowed.⁹⁷ However, a judgment, in substance, that plaintiff has a valid lien on the property for the sum found due him, and that the sheriff sell the property and from the proceeds pay plaintiff the sum found due him and bring the surplus money in-

Where realty was conveyed under contract granting permission to purchaser to erect building on realty, which should be security for purchase price, materialman sought to foreclose lien which attached by reason of erection of the building, and vendor recovered judgment on cross complaint establishing superiority of his vendor's lien, judgment properly followed statutory provisions for actions for strict foreclosure of a ven-

to court to abide its further order, is not unintelligible and incapable of being carried out by the sheriff because it is not stated which of the defendants shall pay the amount found due plaintiff⁹⁸ A judgment in an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien need not adjudge that the land directed to be sold is necessary for the convenient use and occupation of the building where the complaint alleges that all of the land is necessary for such purpose and the court finds the allegation to be true⁹⁹

The failure of a judgment to adjudge that at the commencement of the action the land belonged to the person who caused the building to be constructed or that it was erected with his knowledge does not render the judgment erroneous where it is alleged and found that defendant at whose instance the building was erected was at all times mentioned the owner and entitled to the possession of the property and that the interest of the other defendants who claimed to have some interest therein was subsequent to plaintiff's lien¹ Where there is a finding showing the amount due for work and materials, a repetition of the statement that the sum for which the judgment is rendered is the amount due for such work and materials is unnecessary²

A judgment in a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien must be rendered against some person as defendant and may not be against the land alone, and a valid judgment may not be entered against or in favor of one who is not brought within the jurisdiction of the court

A judgment in a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien must be rendered against some person as defendant and may not be against the land alone³ A valid judgment may not be entered against or in favor of one who is not brought within the jurisdiction of the court.⁴ Where, prior to the filing of plaintiff's lien, the property in question is conveyed to one not a party to the action at the time of the judgment by a deed containing a statutory covenant

giving it precedence over subsequently filed mechanics' liens, and there is no finding of fraud in the execution and delivery of the deed, and the deed is not set aside, it has been held that the court has no jurisdiction to direct a foreclosure of the lien against the premises⁵

The rights of a necessary party to the action should be found and adjudicated in the decree,⁶ and, where defendant's wife is a necessary party, the proper procedure is to find and adjudicate her rights in the decree, not to dismiss her, even on her own objection or motion⁷ However, it has been held that a judgment against a husband only for the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien on a homestead is not void as to the husband's interest, although the wife's interest is not foreclosed thereby⁸

Where a lienor dealt directly with the owner and the lien was entitled to priority over a mortgage, the rights of the parties would not be affected by the fact that the judgment for the sum claimed on the mechanic's lien was rendered against the owner of the house alone where its recital embraced all parties, describing their interests and providing that if no sufficient property was found the residue should be levied out of the premises⁹ A surety on a contractor's bond to an owner, conditioned for the payment of labor and material claims, may be made a party and a decree may be rendered against him, in a suit by an unpaid materialman¹⁰ so that a court having jurisdiction of the parties may determine the validity of claims interfering with the enforcement of the lien.

Under a statute contemplating that the rights of all parties interested in the property shall be determined in one proceeding, a judgment or decree, in a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, may be framed accordingly, so as to adjust and determine the equities of all the parties to the action,¹¹ and a court having jurisdiction of the parties may determine the validity of claims interfering with the enforcement of the lien.¹² Under such a statute the court may render a decree against the sureties on a bond given to release liens,¹³ determine the rights of all parties on a subcontractor's bill against the contractor and owner in which the owner has filed a cross bill against the contractor's surety,¹⁴ or award judgments in favor of a general contractor or of subcontractors on determining the validity of their liens in a subcontractor's action,¹⁵ or award a contractor an affirmative judgment on a counterclaim against a subcontractor.¹⁶ In an action against partners for the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien, a provision in the judgment for an adjustment between the partners if one should pay more than his share of the judgment has been held proper.¹⁷ No affirmative relief, however, may be granted a defendant subcontractor, in an action to foreclose a lien, as against a defendant contractor on whom the subcontractor failed to serve an answer.¹⁸

Issues between an owner and contractor may be adjudicated in a subcontractor's suit,¹⁹ and an owner who has paid the contract price may be awarded a judgment against the contractor for the amount recovered by subcontractors or materialmen.²⁰ On foreclosure of a contractor's lien for the balance due him, a subcontractor who has filed a lien is entitled to a judgment directing payment out of the moneys due the contractor under his lien.²¹ Where suits on several lien claims are tried together, the judgment as to one claim may be valid, although on another claim the judgment may be wrong.²² Under a statute not granting a lien against a public work itself, the court should not enforce an asserted lien against such a structure,²³ but it should not order a materialman's claim entirely erased from the mortgage records,²⁴ and should restrict its judgment to ordering the cancellation of plaintiff's recorded claim as a lien and privilege, leaving the inscription to remain in effect for whatever it may be worth in all other respects.²⁵

(2) Amount of Recovery

The judgment or decree in a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien should allow the claimant the amount due him.

A judgment or decree in a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien should allow the amount due claimant,²⁶ but it should not allow more than is due²⁷ and it must not grant a double recovery.²⁸ Under some statutory provisions the court should, on entering judgment for plaintiff, allow as part of the costs all moneys paid for the filing and recording of the lien, and also a reasonable amount for

Claims of subcontractors

(1) Where a subcontractor's claim attorney's fees,²⁹ but to permit defendant to recover attorney's fees in an action in which it is determined that he is liable would be to assist him in taking advantage of his own wrong³⁰

Where the demand is unliquidated it has been held discretionary with the chancellor whether or not interest should be awarded in a judgment enforcing a mechanic's lien³¹ The court, in its decree, may include an allowance of interest on an encumbrance covering the property in suit, together with a solicitor's fees to the legal holders of the encumbrance, where such decree is in accordance with the provisions of a trust deed with respect to interest and solicitors' fees³² A judgment showing on its face that the court allowed interest has been held not invalid for failing to set out the interest separately³³ The mere fact that the judgment on the lien is taken for too much, by including interest not properly recoverable, is not of itself conclusive proof of fraud, but it cannot be sustained for this amount as against a subsequent mortgage³⁴ Where demands due at separate times were included in a mechanic's lien, and parts were due and parts not due when the action was brought, the court may render judgment for an amount which was not due when the action was brought but subsequently fell due and is unpaid when the judgment is rendered³⁵ Where foreclosure proceedings are begun before the maturity of notes given for the contract price, the contractor may have a judgment for the amount due on the notes at the time of trial.³⁶

Under a statute which provides that the contractor may recover only such sum as may be due after deducting the claims of other parties for work and materials included by his contract, only claims for which valid liens have been filed should be deducted³⁷ Under a statute providing that no owner of a building on which a mechanic's lien of a subcontractor may be filed shall be required to pay the original contractor, unless furnished receipts and waivers of claim for mechanics' liens or good and sufficient bond, the amounts due subcontractors must be considered in determining the recovery of a contractor failing to furnish receipts and waivers of claims for liens³⁸

§ 320. Description of Property

If it is to operate otherwise than as in personam, a judgment or decree in a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien must contain a description of the property involved, with the certainty ordinarily required of a conveyance, or it must at least embody a general description of the property, the judgment must be complete in itself and not depend on other record recitals

If it is to operate otherwise than as in personam,³⁹ a judgment or decree in a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien must contain a description of the property involved,⁴⁰ with the certainty ordinarily required of a conveyance,⁴¹ or it must at least embody a general description of the property⁴² The judgment must be complete in itself and not depend on other record recitals⁴³ Where a lien is claimed on a building with such land around it "as may be required for the convenient use and occupation thereof," the decree should define the extent of the land subject to the lien,⁴⁴ and, while a failure to do so will not invalidate the decree,⁴⁵ a purchaser thereunder will probably acquire no land beyond that covered by the building⁴⁶ Where is disallowed to the extent that the contractor's claim for materials used by the subcontractor in the building in question is allowed, there is no duplication of claim in allowing the contractor's and subcontractor's claim—Paterson v Condos, 28 P 2d 499, 55 Nev 134, rehearing denied 30 P 2d 283, 55 Nev 260

(2) It has been held that in an original contractor's suit to foreclose a lien, where the court decrees a lien in favor of a subcontractor, the amount received by the subcontractor should be credited both on the subcontractor's judgment against the owner and on his judgment against the contractor—Bradfield v Bollier, 128 P 2d 942, 169 Or 425

§ 321. Conformity to Lien Statement

Ordinarily a judgment or decree in a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien should conform to the statement of claim of lien, but small variances will not defeat the lien in the absence of bad faith

Ordinarily a judgment or decree in a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien should conform to the statement of claim of lien as to the property covered⁴⁸ and usually may not be rendered for more than the amount claimed in the lien statement⁴⁹ So also, plaintiff may recover only for what was done or furnished between the dates stated in the lien statement, although the evidence shows that work was done or materials furnished at other times⁵⁰ However, small variances between the lien as filed and as allowed will not defeat the lien in the absence of bad faith,⁵¹ and it has been held that, where plaintiff has recovered a judgment for more than claimed in his notice, he may be allowed to remit the excess⁵² It has further been held that, where the judgment is generally against defendants and is not special against the lands, the fact that the judgment is greater than the lien claim does not constitute error ⁵³

§ 322. Conformity to Pleadings, Issues, and Proof

A judgment or decree in a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien must be supported by the pleadings and the evidence, it must be within, and dispose of, all the issues made by the pleadings, but should not be broader than the averments thereof or grant relief not thereby demanded

Prayer for judgment against contractor's bond

One complying with a statute by filing a verified account with the clerk of the court has been held entitled to have a lien declared in his favor, although he does not pray for such relief, but seeks judgment against a contractor's bond, on the assumption that the filing of a bond

cree should not grant relief not demanded by the pleadings⁶⁰ Although a complaint expressly or impliedly alleges completion of the building, it has been held that a judgment of foreclosure on the basis of substantial performance may be sustained,⁶¹ but a petition failing to allege a provision of a contract for the foreclosure of a lien on partial performance of the contract, or an amount reasonably necessary to complete improvements, has been held not to invoke the court's jurisdiction to grant foreclosure on such performance under a prayer for general relief⁶² A direction for a deficiency judgment has been held not erroneous although the complaint did not pray for such relief⁶³ A decree in a suit to foreclose a mechanic's lien may be for less than the amount claimed where there is substantial evidence in the record to support the decree⁶⁴

The court has no power to order a sale of property other than that mentioned in the petition and on which a lien has been decreed,⁶⁵ and, where the bill

claims a lien on a particular lot, it is error for the decree to extend the lien over other lots not mentioned in the bill⁶⁶ Ordinarily the judgment is erroneous where the description of the land contained therein does not correspond to the description in the petition and the exhibit made a part thereof⁶⁷

A judgment or decree in a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien must conform to the findings or verdict

A judgment or decree in a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien must conform to the findings⁶⁸ or verdict⁶⁹ Findings showing a right to a lien are inconsistent with a judgment dismissing the claim⁷⁰ A finding that claimant had been paid for materials furnished precludes a judgment against defendant for the amount of the claim⁷¹ Complainant may, after a verdict declaring a lien on a building and land, relinquish his right to proceed against the land and take a judgment against the building only⁷²

§ 324. Direction for Sale and Distribution of Proceeds

- a In general
- b Prior claims and outstanding interests
- c Sale of improvement apart from land

a. In General

Ordinarily a judgment or decree foreclosing a mechanic's lien may and should provide for or authorize a sale of the property subject to the lien, or of the owner's interest therein, after allowing a reasonable time for the payment of the amount found due, and should also provide for the proper distribution of the proceeds of the sale.

While, where a money decree is entered in a proceeding to enforce a lien there is apparently no objection to allowing complainant an execution to collect it,⁷³ usually a judgment or decree foreclosing a mechanic's lien may and should, unless such a judgment is beyond the jurisdiction of the particular court,⁷⁴ provide for or authorize a sale of the property, or of the owner's interest therein,⁷⁵ after allowing a reasonable time for the payment of the amount found due,⁷⁶ although it has been held that the allowance of such opportunity for prevention of a sale is unnecessary where the statute provides for a redemption.⁷⁷ A federal court, it has been held, will order a sale of the property and franchises of an irrigation corporation as a whole and without the right of redemption where under existing circumstances the equity of the case requires it.⁷⁸

The judgment should direct the payment of costs and of the liens out of the proceeds of sale.⁷⁹ A statute applicable to suits for the enforcement of judgment liens requiring an account of the rents and profits to determine whether they will be suffi-

It has been held that the court should provide for the disposition of surplus proceeds of the sale, if any, in accordance with the parties' respective rights.⁸¹ A judgment in favor of a general contractor for an amount including a subcontractor's claim is not incompatible with a judgment in favor of the subcontractor in an independent proceeding; the several judgments may remain, and the court by a proper order should provide for the application of the proceeds arising from the sale of the property so as to protect the rights of all the parties, but should not reduce the amount of the contractor's judgment.⁸² However, it has also been held that the court need not direct to whom the surplus money, if any, arising from the sale should be paid, that may remain subject to a future order of the court.⁸³ The order of sale and the order of distribution are so far separate and distinct that the order of sale may be valid and effective even though the order of distribution may be invalid.⁸⁴

Property subject to lien In a suit to foreclose a mechanic's lien, it has been held that the court may not direct a sale before defining the land to which the lien attaches.⁸⁵ While the area to be included in an order of sale, on the foreclosure of a lien, has been held to be a question largely within the trial court's discretion,⁸⁶ the court may not decree a sale of more than the amount of land to which the lien attaches under the statute.⁸⁷ Where there is a lien against two or more properties by reason of the failure of the owner of one of the properties to make payment due, the decree should direct that the property of the defaulting owner be the first sold to satisfy the claim, if the amount found to be due is not paid by a given date⁸⁸

On denial of lien Where certain plaintiffs are denied a lien, the judgment should not direct that they be paid out of the money arising out of the sale of the property, since such a judgment is, in effect, an ordering of the foreclosure of the lien, such plaintiffs should be relegated to the usual remedy of a levy of execution⁸⁹ Creditors of the contractor who have no lien on the property are entitled only to a money judgment against the contractor, and not to a judgment providing that the remainder of the fund due from the owner to the contractor after payment of liens shall be distributed between them⁹⁰

b. Prior Claims and Outstanding Interests

Ordinarily provision should be made for a prior lien in a judgment directing a sale, and the rights of junior lienors should not be cut off

A judgment directing a sale which makes no provision for a prior lien⁹¹ or which cuts off the rights, if any, of junior lienors⁹² has been held erroneous Where there are prior liens⁹³ or outstanding interests not subject to the lien foreclosed,⁹⁴ it has been held that the sale should be ordered subject to such interests or liens. Where a prior lien is for an unmatured indebtedness, the decree should, it has been held, not order a sale of the premises and the application of the proceeds to the payment of such indebtedness, thereby hastening its maturity,⁹⁵ and, where a statute provides simply for a sale subject to prior encumbrances, the court is without authority to direct a sale and the payment of prior encumbrances from the proceeds where such prior encumbrances are not yet due⁹⁶ However, it has also been held that the court may order the property sold free of all mechanics' and mortgage liens of the parties to the suit and transfer the liens to the proceeds of the sale,⁹⁷ and that the prior lienholders, being made parties, may not complain that they are not seeking to foreclose their liens and that no judgment should be rendered which in effect compels them to accept the results of such a foreclosure⁹⁸

Where certain liens are superior to a mortgage and also to other liens and the rest are inferior to the mortgage, the decree should provide that prior claims should be paid as though there were no mortgage and the residue apply first to the mortgage and then to the inferior liens⁹⁹ If the lien attaches to a part only of lands covered by a mortgage, the court cannot apportion the mortgage debt so as to fix only a certain amount thereof on the part charged with the lien¹

Ordinarily, in the absence of a statutory requirement, the judgment or decree should not provide for a sale of the structure or improvement as distinct from the land upon which it is erected

Ordinarily the judgment or decree should not, in the absence of a statutory requirement, provide for a sale of the structure or improvement as distinct from the land upon which it is erected² However, where the lien attaches to the erection and improvement for which material is furnished, a judgment ordering the sale of the structure may be valid although the structure cannot be removed from the land³ Under a statute giving authority to the court on foreclosure to apportion the amount of the Sale of improvements

Where improvements are erected on land covered by a prior mortgage and they cannot be removed without destroying their value, it has been held that the court may properly order the sale of the land and improvements together, as a whole, if it seems that more can be realized than if each is sold separately, provided the court orders the prior mortgage paid in full out of the proceeds, but that the court may not do so if the mechanics' lien claimants insist on the right to have the improvement sold separately so as to have their statutory right of removal—Fleming-Gilchrist Const Co v McGonigle, 89 SW 2d 15, 338 Mo 56, 107 A. claim in proportion to the enhanced value of the tract if necessary to protect the rights of third persons, the court may direct a sale of the building with the privilege of removal before resorting to the land.⁴ Under a statute so providing, when the title or interest in the land upon which the improvement is made cannot be subject to the lien, the court may,⁵ in the exercise of its sound discretion,⁶ order the sale and removal from the land of the property subject to the lien. Whether a house may be sold and removed must be determined from the evidence in the particular case.⁷ It has been held that the court has inherent power, on a proper showing, to grant a reasonable time within which a building may be removed on sale to satisfy a lien, as a necessary incident to the fulfillment of a judgment.⁸ Where the decree provides for the sale and removal of a structure within a stated time after the remittitur if the case is appealed, and defendant's appeal is dismissed because defective, the case has been held appealed within the meaning of the decree.⁹

§ 325. Determination as to Priorities

Where there are several mechanics' liens or other encumbrances on the property, it is proper for the court to fix the order of priority and direct payment accordingly, but a decree adjudicating the priority of a lien or interest must be justified by the pleadings and evidence.

Where there are several mechanics' liens or other encumbrances on the property, it is proper for the court to fix the order of priority and direct payment accordingly,¹⁰ and it has been held that the court should determine the priorities before decreeing a sale, and not merely decree a sale and direct that the proceeds be brought into court.¹¹ A decree adjudicating the priority of a lien or interest is improper where not justified by the pleadings and evidence.¹² The fact that a petition to foreclose a mechanic's lien makes unknown owners of deeds of trust to the property defendants has been held not to render a decree holding plaintiff's lien superior to liens of the deeds of trust erroneous, where, at the trial, plaintiff dismissed as to such unknown owners.¹³

§ 326. Judgment against Both Owner and Contractor

Under some statutes, in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien by a subcontractor, where a lien is established there must be a finding and a decree against both the owner of the property involved and the contractor.

Under statutes providing that all suits by subcontractors shall be against both the owner and the contractor jointly and that all judgments where a lien is established shall be against both jointly, in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien by a subcontractor there must be a finding and a decree against both the owner of the property involved and the contractor.¹⁴ Under such a statute judgment is recoverable against the owner only for the amount recoverable from the contractor,¹⁵ and a decree in favor of a subcontractor is defective where it does not find any amount to be due the contractor from the owner,¹⁶ but, where the contractor is made a defendant and is served by publication, a decree in rem for the sale of the premises may be authorized although he does not appear.¹⁷ Where insolvency proceedings have been begun against a contractor, a general judgment may be had against the contractor and a special judgment against the owner.¹⁸ The court may give a judgment for the sum actually due against the contractor and in favor of the defendant owner where there has been a failure to prosecute the lien claim within the statutory period.

of limitations¹⁹ On dismissing a bill as to the owner for want of equity, it is not necessary to enter a judgment for the amount of the claim against the contractor who has defaulted where the bill is left pending as to the contractor.²⁰

§ 327. Single or Separate Judgments

Where several lien claimants are authorized by statute to join in the same action, a single judgment against a contractor may properly be made and entered, and it has been held that there should be but one judgment in such an action covering all the issues.

Where several lien claimants are authorized by statute to join in the same action, as discussed supra § 272, a single judgment against the contractor may be properly made and entered,²¹ and it has been held generally that there should be but one judgment in such an action covering all the issues.²² The rendition of a separate judgment and award of execution for the amount found due each claimant is not erroneous where the judgment provides that the proceeds of sale under any execution in favor of any of the parties shall be distributed and paid out on all the judgments as directed in the decree.²³

§ 328. Personal Judgment

Ordinarily, in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien, there may be both a judgment establishing the lien and providing for the foreclosure thereof, and also a personal judgment in favor of claimant against the party directly liable to him, but a personal judgment is not necessary to support a lien or a judgment or decree foreclosing a lien.

As discussed supra § 266, the remedy by way of enforcement of a mechanic's lien is ordinarily regarded as cumulative, and, as a rule in an action to enforce a lien, there may be both a judgment establishing the lien and providing for the foreclosure thereof and also a personal judgment in favor of claimant against the party directly liable to him.²⁴ In order that the court may render a personal judgment it must have acquired jurisdiction of the person of defendant,²⁵ and the judgment must be supported by the pleadings,²⁶ evidence,²⁷ and findings.²⁸ A judgment, in a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, must, in fact, be a personal judgment, in order to be considered as such.²⁹

Where the statutory proceeding is wholly in rem,³⁰ as where the purpose of the suit is only to establish and foreclose a lien,³¹ a personal judgment

In a mechanic's lien suit, a judgment, reciting that plaintiffs "recover from the defendants" a certain sum and that judgment attach to the sum theretofore deposited with the clerk of court as an undertaking to pay any judgment rendered in the cause, has been held not, in fact, a personal judgment against property owner—*Jackson v J. may not be rendered, and in some jurisdictions the general rule is that there may be no personal judgment or decree with execution until after the foreclosure sale.³² A personal judgment against the owner for damages for a breach of the contract may not be recovered in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien³³ unless expressly authorized by the statute,³⁴ nor may a judgment be rendered against the owner requiring the specific performance on his part of an agreement to convey certain real estate in part payment for the work done.³⁵ A judgment in an action to foreclose a lien which merely eliminates plaintiff's further lien rights has been held not to restrict him from applying for the entry of a personal judgment against defendant who was held personally liable by the judgment.³⁶

Necessity A personal judgment against the party personally liable for the labor or materials is not necessary to support a lien,³⁷ and a personal judgment is not requisite to a judgment or decree foreclosing a lien.³⁸ However, it has been held that where claimant does not take a personal judgment against his debtors, who are parties to the suit and within the jurisdiction of the court, he may not prosecute another and separate suit for the same demand.³⁹

§ 329. — Failure to Establish Lien

Ordinarily a personal judgment in favor of claimant against his debtor may be rendered although claimant fails to establish or maintain his alleged lien.

Ordinarily a personal judgment in favor of claimant against his debtor may be rendered although claimant fails to establish or maintain his alleged lien.⁴⁰ However, in some jurisdictions,⁴¹ such as those in which the distinction between law and equity is retained and the lien proceeding is in equity,⁴² it has been held that a personal judgment may not be entered in such a case. It has also been held that claimant is not entitled to have any personal judgment in his favor unless he has established his right to enforce his lien as to at least part of the amount claimed.⁴³

Although the jurisdiction of the court rests on the fact that the proceeding is for the foreclosure of a lien, the amount in controversy being such that jurisdiction of a mere money demand therefor would not exist, it has been held that the court is not deprived of the power to enter a personal judgment because of the failure of the lien proceeding,⁴⁴ but the contrary has also been held.⁴⁵ Where the lien claim exceeds the court's jurisdiction but the claim for personal judgment does not, it has been held that the personal judgment may be valid although the judgment foreclosing the lien is void ⁴⁶

Plaintiff must, of course, establish his claim in order to be entitled to a personal judgment,⁴⁷ and a judgment rendered on failure to establish a lien may not include any amount for attorney's fees or costs incident to the preparation and filing of a lien notice ⁴⁸ A statute providing that a lienor failing for any reason "to establish a valid lien" in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien may recover judgment in such action for such sums as are due him against any party to the action does not authorize the entry of a personal judgment in proceedings to enforce a mechanic's lien in favor of one who never could have had a lien⁴⁹ or in favor of one who never filed a lien and made no demand for a personal judgment ⁵⁰

In an action against the contractor and the owner, a subcontractor or materialman may have a personal judgment against the contractor although he may fail as to a lien ⁵¹

In the exercise of its equitable powers it has been held that the court may direct the owner to pay the claim of a subcontractor or materialman from a balance of the contract price in his hands, where the subcontractor or materialman has given notice of his claim to the owner but fails to perfect his lien ⁵²

§ 330. — Deficiency Judgment

Ordinarily, in an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien, the court may enter a personal judgment against the person directly liable to the claimant for the balance of the claim remaining unpaid after a sale of the property and distribution of the proceeds

While it has been held that, in an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien, the court may not enter a deficiency judgment unless provided for by statute,⁵³ ordinarily in such an action the court may enter a personal judgment against the person directly liable to claimant for the balance of the claim remaining unpaid after a sale of the property and distribution of the proceeds ⁵⁴ A judgment in a mechanic's lien action need not specifically provide for a deficiency judgment in order to authorize a later entry of a personal judgment against defendant found personally liable for the balance due after the foreclosure sale ⁵⁵ Under some statutory provisions one furnishing materials to a subcontractor for the construction of a building who has foreclosed his lien against the owner thereof may not be entitled to a deficiency judgment against the contractor where there is no finding that the contractor's bond had been given as required by statute ⁵⁶

Direction for execution It has been held proper to order that, in case of a deficiency on a sale of the property, the sheriff certify the amount and plaintiff have execution therefor ⁵⁷

§ 331. — Against Whom Judgment Rendered

The failure of a materialman to file separate statements of lien against separate tracts of land has been held not to defeat his right to secure a personal judgment against an owner who sold the property without protecting him before the expiration of the time for filing his lien as required by statute,⁶¹ but under some statutory provisions the failure of a materialman to record his lien or claim judgment against him⁶⁵ Plaintiff suing for a money judgment and foreclosure of a mechanic's lien, based on an account against certain defendants only, may, in the absence of fraud, waive his lien and take personal judgment against other defendants without amending his complaint⁶⁶

Where an action by mechanics' lien claimants against the owner is founded on the theory that all the claimants were subcontractors, a recovery may not be had on the ground that some of the materials furnished were sold directly to the owner or that he promised to pay therefor⁶⁷ A subcontractor may not obtain a personal judgment against the owner where he fails to prove that anything was due from the owner to the contractor either before or after the lien notice was filed⁶⁸ However, where the owner admits that he has in his hands and due the contractor an amount sufficient to pay off a subcontractor's lien, holding such amount to be paid the contractor or otherwise as the court may direct, it has been held proper to enter a personal judgment against both the contractor and the owner⁶⁹ So too, where it appears that a contractor abandoned the work before completion of the building and that there remains in the owner's hands a part of the contract price more than sufficient to pay the lien claims of subcontractors, a personal judgment against the owner in favor of the subcontractors has been held proper⁷⁰ Where, as discussed supra § 114, service of a notice by a materialman to withhold payment operates, in effect, as a garnishment or equitable assignment of the amounts due or thereafter becoming due under the contract, materialmen have been held entitled to a personal judgment against the owner, there being an indebtedness due from him to the original contractor.⁷¹

a grantee of the owner, who neither promised to pay for the labor or materials nor assumed the obligations of his grantor,⁷² or against heirs of an owner who are in possession of the land⁷³ It has also been held that a person performing labor and furnishing materials at the direction of an agent of a purchaser of premises under a contract of sale, without direct dealings with the seller, may not recover a personal judgment against the seller for such materials and labor,⁷⁴ and that one who has contracted to sell land, and put the purchaser in possession, may not be subjected to a personal judgment for building materials furnished his vendee, when the latter subsequently forfeits his contract of purchase⁷⁵ A personal judgment may not be rendered for work done or materials furnished against an agent of an owner who has acted within the scope of his authority in authorizing or ordering the work or materials and who has not assumed personal liability therefor⁷⁶

Husband or wife. A married woman may be rendered liable to a personal judgment through a contract made by her husband as her agent⁷⁷ However, where a husband has no authority to bind his wife personally for work and materials furnished, no personal judgment may be rendered against her therefor.⁷⁸ It has also been held that a personal judgment may not be rendered against a wife for material and labor furnished at her request to be used on her husband's property with the knowledge and consent of the husband⁷⁹ A statute allowing a lien against the property of a married woman, when material purchased by her husband is used in the improvement of her property, does not authorize a personal judgment against her unless she adopts her husband's contract as her own or makes herself responsible for the debt as in other cases⁸⁰

Where the wife knows of improvements being made on her property and in person exercises superintendence over the construction of the improvement, she may be liable for a personal judgment although she may not have expressly authorized her husband to contract for the material.⁸¹

A personal judgment may be rendered against a husband for material and labor furnished at his wife's request to be used on the husband's property, with the knowledge and consent of the husband.⁸² Also a personal judgment may be granted against a husband for an account owed by him personally where the wife is the owner of the property.⁸³ Where material is furnished for property belonging to a community existing between a husband and wife, judgment may be granted against the husband the master of the community.⁸⁴ However, where material is not ordered by the husband, it has been held that judgment may not be rendered against him for material used on the wife's property.⁸⁵

§ 332. Imposing Conditions Precedent to Entry of Judgment

Where justice requires it, the court may impose conditions precedent to the entry of judgment.

Where justice requires it, the court may impose conditions precedent to the entry of judgment.⁸⁶ So the court may require the delivery up of notes given for the amount for which a lien is claimed⁸⁷ or the production and deposit of outstanding pay checks.⁸⁸

§ 333. Amendment or Vacation

Subject to constitutional and statutory limitations, the court may open or vacate its judgment or decree in a mechanic's lien proceeding or may permit its amendment.

Subject to constitutional and statutory restrictions,⁸⁹ under its general power over its judgments and decrees the court may open or vacate its judgment or decree in a mechanic's lien proceeding⁹⁰ or may permit its amendment.⁹¹ Thus a judgment may be amended for the purpose of supplying an inadvertent omission,⁹² for the purpose of correcting a clerical error,⁹³ or to make it conform to the report of a referee.⁹⁴ A judgment improper in form should be modified by the court,⁹⁵ and a decree which should contain a provision for the disposition of surplus proceeds of sale, but does not do so, should be modified to make such provision.⁹⁶

Where, in an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien, a judgment of another court establishing plaintiff's claim is given in evidence, and judgment is rendered for plaintiff, and afterward the judgment so given in evidence is reversed on appeal, it has been held that defendant is not entitled to have the judgment of foreclosure annulled; his only relief is to have such judgment opened and a new trial granted.⁹⁷ An application to the court to modify the lien decreed so that it should apply only to the premises claimed by defendant to be liable thereto, supported by affidavits, has been held proper as it does not ask a rehearing on the merits, which requires an open-

Admission of new parties Where a judgment to establish and enforce a mechanic's lien has been taken without making the person who owned the property at the commencement of the action a party, it has been held that the court by which the lien judgment is rendered may, on motion of such owner and on a proper showing of facts, set aside the judgment within a year after its entry and admit the moving party to defend against the claim for a lien.⁹⁹ Where a judgment has been entered on a scire facias to which a third person having a lien has not been made a party, such person, although entitled to intervene, has been held not entitled to have the lien stricken¹

An additional judgment after the term has elapsed at which a judgment was taken for the amount of the lien costs and attorney's fees has been held not void as beyond the court's jurisdiction² Where in an action on an account and to foreclose a mechanic's lien there was a general finding for plaintiff, on which a personal judgment only was entered against defendant, and after the rendition of the judgment and at the same term of court defendant filed a motion for a new trial, which at the next term was overruled, and at a later day in the term on motion of plaintiff without notice to defendant the court set aside its former judgment and entered a like personal judgment and a decree foreclosing the lien, it has been held that this action was within the power of the court, and not erroneous³

Writ of review A final judgment on a petition to enforce a mechanic's lien may, at least when the petition was inserted in a writ of original summons, be the subject of a writ of review, or may without the forms of granting and suing out a writ of review be ordered to be vacated and the case brought forward on the docket for trial under a statute allowing final judgments in civil actions, when the execution has not been satisfied to be more summarily reviewed in this manner⁴

§ 334. Operation and Effect

A judgment or decree in a mechanic's lien suit concludes the interests of the parties to the suit, their privies, and persons whose interests accrue after the commencement of the suit, as to any right, fact, or matter in issue, and directly adjudicated on, or necessarily involved in, the determination of the action; ordinarily it is not open to collateral attack.

Construction and effect of decree generally

(1) In construing a decree, the intent of the court must be determined as gathered from all parts of the instrument, and effect must be given to that which is clearly implied as well as to that which is expressed—Weir & Russell Lumber Co v Kempf, 12 NW 2d 857, 234 Iowa 450

(2) It has been held that a decree establishing a mechanic's lien which orders that, in default of the payment of its amount by the lessee or the owner to whom he has surrendered, the interest of all the parties

operate against the interest of a person not served with process,⁹ and parties who are interested in the property or subject matter and between whom and the parties to the proceeding there is no privity are not bound by the judgment in such proceeding if they are not parties before the court¹⁰ A judgment is not conclusive as to strangers to the action, and persons who have an interest in the property at the time the proceedings are commenced and are not made parties are not bound or affected thereby¹¹ but may go behind the foreclosure and contest the validity of the lien as well as proceedings thereon leading up to the execution of the sheriff's deed¹²

Where a subcontractor who has performed work or furnished material prosecutes his claim to judgment against his debtor, and then proceeds by scire facias against the owner, the judgment recovered is binding, as far as the amount of indebtedness is concerned, on such owner¹³ Where a judgment, in an action to enforce a lien, must necessarily determine the location and ownership of a building, defendants are estopped thereafter to make any claim to the building on the theory that the location is other than as described in the judgment¹⁴ A judg-

A judgment or decree establishing a mechanic's lien on the building alone, separate from the land, and ordering it sold to satisfy the lien, necessarily adjudicates the question of the nature of the improvement and in effect decrees it to be personal property¹⁶ A decree in a mechanic's lien foreclosure suit has the effect of quieting title as to one purchasing the premises after the lien attached where he is joined to foreclose the right of redemption.¹⁷ If the judgment creditor, or his assignee, becomes the owner of the land on which the judgment is a lien, the lien has been held to merge into the legal title unless, because of inferior liens, a merger would be productive of injustice¹⁸

Transition of title. A mechanic's lienor has been held to obtain title only when his decree foreclosing his lien becomes absolute¹⁹ A decree of sale does not vest in plaintiff either the title or the right of possession²⁰

therein shall be sold will be construed as applying to the interest of the parties in the leasehold estate, including the improvements for which the lien is established—Dobschuetz v Holliday, 82 Ill 371

(3) A judgment that realty be sold to satisfy materialman's lien and that excess be distributed among defendants has been held an implied finding that given defendant had interest in realty—McDaniel v Belt, Tex Civ App, 54 S W 2d 592

(4) A final decree in mechanic's lien foreclosure suit against owner of fee, without joining other lien holders, has been held at least prima facie good as determination of all facts to be implied as true from fact of rendition of final decree—Kurz v Pappas, 146 So 100, 107 Fla 861, motion granted 147 So 271, 107 Fla 861, and followed in Mediterranean Corporation v Pappas, 146 So 106, 107 Fla 876, motion granted 147 So 270, 107 Fla 876

would be fatal,²¹ but where the petition is not sufficient to justify the entry of a decree fixing a lien on the premises, the deficiency is not cured by a recital in the decree that complainants gave evidence to sustain every allegation of the petition²²

Collateral attack. A judgment or decree in a mechanic's lien proceeding ordinarily is not open to collateral attack²³ except on the ground of lack of jurisdiction²⁴ or fraud and collusion²⁵. The question whether the court erred in refusing a continuance may not be determined on a collateral attack on the judgment²⁶. All presumptions are in favor of the judgment,²⁷ and the presumption is in favor of the jurisdiction of a court of general original jurisdiction²⁸.

A decree in a mechanic's lien proceeding has been held to perfect and perpetuate the lien created by statute and not to bring the lien into existence.

A decree in a mechanic's lien proceeding has been held to perfect and perpetuate the lien created by statute; the decree itself, it has been held, does not bring the lien into existence²⁹. Where no personal judgment is entered against the alleged owners of realty in a mechanic's lien proceeding, it has been held that no lien exists against any of the alleged owners' realty except as provided for in the decree perfecting the mechanic's lien³⁰. A mechanic's lien does not merge into the judgment unless the judgment is valid and enforceable³¹.

The judgment should declare the claim to be a lien on the specific premises from the proper date³². If it nowhere appears in the judgment roll when the lien attached to the building the judgment will operate as a lien on the premises from the time it was docketed³³. A decree giving a lien from too early a date is erroneous if the rights of third persons are affected by it, but otherwise the decree will not be reversed on that ground³⁴. Where separate liens on distinct parcels of land are foreclosed in one proceeding, the judgment becomes a lien on all of the tracts when rendered and does not relate back to the filing of the lien statement³⁵.

A judgment, although it is a special lien on specific property, may nevertheless be regarded as a lien of general character as distinguished from a mortgage lien³⁶. If, when the proceedings to enforce a mechanic's lien are against the same person as builder and owner, the minutes of the court show a general and special judgment, which would give a lien prior to a mortgage, but the record shows a general judgment only, the court of chancery, in the absence of fraud or imposition, may not impose the debt involved therein as a lien on the lands in question, on the ground that it ought to have been recorded as a special judgment³⁷.

Under some statutes the judgment lien is limited to the amount of land found to be required for the convenient use and occupation of the premises³⁸. Under other statutes, however, a personal judgment in a mechanic's lien proceeding becomes a lien on all of the debtor's real estate and may be enforced as are other judgment liens.³⁹ A mechanic's lien judgment has been held not to constitute a lien on personal property.⁴⁰

When a mechanic's lien foreclosure judgment ceases to be a lien or cloud on the real property of the judgment debtor depends on statutory provisions and the construction placed thereon.⁴¹

F. EXECUTION AND ENFORCEMENT OF JUDGMENT OR DECREE, AND SALE AND REVIEW

While, as discussed infra § 337, a sale of the property is the ordinary method of enforcing a mechanic's lien, an execution may issue to enforce a final money judgment rendered in an action brought to enforce a mechanic's lien,⁴² notwithstanding the judgment also contains a provision for sale of the property in satisfaction of part of the claim,⁴³ if the judgment is valid and in full force and effect,⁴⁴ has not been paid,⁴⁵ and the judgment creditor has not waived his right to an execution.⁴⁶ Indeed, in some local, inferior courts not possessing jurisdiction to decree a foreclosure sale, execution is the only means of enforcing the judgment.⁴⁷ A compliance with statutes relating to the recording of a transcript of the judgment is essential before execution may properly issue from a court other than the one in which the judgment was rendered.⁴⁸ Ordinarily the execution to be issued is a special one against the property subject to the lien,⁴⁹ unless claimant chooses to waive and abandon his special lien,⁵⁰ or the proceeding is a personal one,⁵¹ a general execution is not authorized in the first instance,⁵² but only after the property subject to the lien has been first exhausted without yielding an amount sufficient to satisfy the lien.⁵³ Under some statutes, a lien claimant, other than the contractor, has a right to the issuance of a special execution against the property subject to the lien without first having attempted to collect by execution a general judgment against the contractor,⁵⁴ but under other statutes the property subject to the lien may be levied on only after it appears that sufficient property of the contractor to satisfy the judgment against him cannot be found.⁵⁵ The special execution must conform to the judgment establishing the lien,⁵⁶ and specify the property to be levied on.⁵⁷ In connection with other provisions of the judgment, a separate award of execution for the amount found due each one of several claimants may be proper.⁵⁸ Where judgment has been rendered followed by a seizure on execution before the appointment of an assignee in insolvency of the owner, no further judgment is required to make the property available to satisfy the execution.⁵⁹

Venditioni exponas or fieri facias Under some statutes on rendition of the judgment under an attachment to enforce a mechanic's lien, the lienor has an election to resort to the enforcement of his recovery by venditioni exponas, or to rely simply on a *fieri facias*⁶⁰ If he relies on a fieri facias, he waives the lien of his attachment⁶¹

Levy of execution A levy of the execution in order to be effective must be made in the time and manner prescribed by the statute⁶²

Stay of, or injunction against, execution Defendant is not entitled to a stay of execution on mere request, where the statute requires the filing of a bond with security⁶³ Prosecution of the execution will not be enjoined unless sufficient grounds therefor exist⁶⁴ In an action to enjoin the execution on the ground that the affidavits in the mechanic's lien suit on which the judgment was based were false and fraudulent, complainant has the burden of proving that the affidavits were actually false to the knowledge of the affiant when made⁶⁵

Action on judgment It has been held that an action on a judgment in a mechanic's lien suit ordering a sale of the property to satisfy the lien cannot be maintained against a defendant in such suit who was adjudged to have an interest in the property, before a sale of the property and determination of the deficiency⁶⁶

§ 337. Sale in General

The ordinary method of enforcing a mechanic's lien is by sale under the judgment of foreclosure or under an execution.

The ordinary method of enforcing a mechanic's lien is by a sale of the property, interest, or estate subject to the lien,⁶⁷ but under some statutes this is not the only method⁶⁸ It is usually held that, except in local, inferior courts without jurisdiction to decree a foreclosure sale,⁶⁹ the sale may be either under the judgment, as in cases of mortgage foreclosure,⁷⁰ or under an execution⁷¹ However, under a few statutes it is held that a sale can be had only under execution⁷² The jurisdiction of a court possessing power generally to decree a sale of land is dependent, in a particular case, on the allegations of the bill⁷³

Effect of prior encumbrances. The fact that the property is subject to a prior encumbrance does not prevent a sale on foreclosure of a mechanic's lien,⁷⁴ subject to the prior encumbrance⁷⁵ Under some statutes the sale must be made subject to the prior encumbrance,⁷⁶ unless the encumbrancer comes in and consents to be made a party,⁷⁷ but under other statutes the sale is made free of encumbrances⁷⁸ and prior encumbrancers must look to the proceeds for satisfaction of their debts, as discussed infra § 348, and, where, in a mechanic's lien foreclosure, it appears that the liens can be satisfied only by a sale of the property, mortgagees who have been made parties cannot object that they are not seeking foreclosure and should not be compelled to accept the results thereof.⁷⁹

It has been held that, where there is doubt as to the priority of the liens, the property should be sold, although it will not bring its full value, and the contest be made over the proceeds of the sale.⁸⁰ However, it has also been held that a sale should not be made until the relative rights of the lienholders have been definitely settled.⁸¹

§ 338. Property or Interest to Be Sold in General

As a general rule the sale should be of no more property or of no greater interest therein than that ordered sold by the judgment or decree.

The sale should not be of more property⁸² or of a larger interest therein⁸³ than the judgment or decree orders to be sold; but it may be of less property than that directed to be sold where, after the judgment was rendered, a part of the property was released from the lien.⁸⁴ Only the estate or interest to which the lien attaches should be sold,⁸⁵ and under some statutes no greater estate can be sold than is vested in the person in possession.⁸⁶ The property subject to the lien must be exhausted before other property of the owner can be subjected to the payment of the judgment in favor of the lienor.⁸⁷

Where part of the property can be separated from the remainder without injury to the whole and sold for an amount sufficient to satisfy the liens, such part only should be sold.⁸⁸ Where, however, a division would be injurious, a sale of a part only should not be made,⁸⁹ the court should order the property sold as a whole, adjusting priorities in the proceeds on equitable principles,⁹⁰ where it has jurisdiction of all the parties in interest and the subject matter of the suit.⁹¹ If the property exceeds the area which the statute allows to be subjected to the lien, the court will divide it in the way best suited to the interests of both parties.⁹²

§ 339. Where Priority over Mortgage Limited to Building or Improvement

Where a mechanic's lien has priority as to the building but not as to the land, a sale of the building separate from the land is permitted under some statutes.

Leased property

(1) A court of equity has power to sell freehold when administering statute governing priority of mechanic's or materialman's lien only where lien is on the freehold, and where lessee not prohibited by lease makes improvement, court of equity cannot sell freehold to enforce lien unless freeholder consents—Harden v Wood Lumber Co, 178 So 540, 235 Ala 310

(2) Thus, where lessee not prohibited by lease made improvement and lessor did not consent to sale of freehold to satisfy materialman's lien, court of equity properly ordered sale of improvement only, preserving statutory right of lessor to prevent sale by paying off lien—Harden v Wood Lumber Co, supra

(3) Where, however, the lessee not prohibited by lease makes improvement, freeholder consents to sale of freehold to satisfy mechanic's or materialman's lien, and it appears that rights and interests of all parties will be promoted by the sale, it is discretionary with court of equity to sell the freehold—*Harden v. the lienor, under some statutes, are enforced by a sale of the building or improvement as distinct from the land,⁹³ the purchaser having the right of removal, as discussed infra § 345, or by a sale of the property as an entirety,⁹⁴ and an apportionment of the proceeds corresponding to separate valuations of the land and the building or improvement,⁹⁵ and application of the proceeds to the payment of the liens according to priorities,⁹⁶ or a distribution of the proceeds in such manner as is directed by statute.⁹⁷ Under some of the statutes a materialman's lien in such a case can be enforced as superior to the prior lien on the land only by a sale of the building separate from the land.⁹⁸ A few statutes, on the other hand, do not authorize the sale of a building erected on land which is subject to a prior mortgage.⁹⁹

court may, in its discretion, order such a sale if the building is removable without substantial damage or injury to either the building or the realty.¹ The practice of selling the property as a whole and thereafter adjusting the equities and priorities in the proceeds is followed where in the best interests of all concerned,² as the court in its discretion may determine,³ as where it is impracticable to remove the building or improvement,⁴ or where such removal would greatly destroy the security,⁵ provided the court has jurisdiction of all the parties in interest and of the subject matter of the suit.⁶ Under other statutes, it is held that the practice of selling the building separately may be pursued, even though the building cannot be removed without great loss.⁷

Under some statutes, the sale may be stayed for a limited time by the giving of a bond with security.⁸ It has been held in some cases that persons who are interested, but who are not made parties, may bring a bill to restrain the sale ordered under a decree foreclosing the lien,⁹ and on such a bill are entitled to have their interests determined by the court,¹⁰ but in other cases the courts have refused to enjoin the sale at the instance of such a person.¹¹ A provision of the statute requiring a sale of the property subject to the lien before a personal judgment for a deficiency may be entered has been held to apply only where the personal judgment is to be entered against the owner.¹² Hence, it does not preclude an injunction against a sale where no personal judgment is sought against the owner.¹³ A mere allegation that from the condition of the times the property will not bring its full value is not an equitable ground for an injunction against the sale,¹⁴ nor is it a ground for enjoining a sale that the judgment of foreclosure failed to give an opportunity for redemption of the property from the lien, where no attempt to redeem has been made.¹⁵

§ 341. Notice and Terms of Sale

There must be a compliance with statutory requirements with respect to the notice and terms of sale.

Provisions of statutes providing for public notice of the sale have been held to be mandatory, not merely directory, at least as far as the sheriff is concerned.¹⁶ Notice of the sale by advertisement or otherwise must cover the property which is subsequently sold¹⁷ and be given for the time¹⁸ and in the manner¹⁹ prescribed by statute. Where defendants have no interest in certain real estate, an advertisement of the sale of their interest cannot prejudice the rights of the true owner.²⁰

Property of value should ordinarily be sold on reasonable credit,²¹ but, where the lien claim is but a small proportion of the value of the whole property, it has been held to be proper to decree a sale for a cash payment sufficient to pay the debt.²² It has been held that, where the property is subject to a prior mortgage, it cannot be sold for less than the full amount thereof.²³

Default by purchaser On failure of a purchaser to complete the contract of sale, the receiver in the lien suit may sue to forfeit the earnest money put up by such purchaser.²⁴

§ 342. Confirming or Setting Aside Sale

A sale will be confirmed if no valid ground for refusal exists. The sale may be set aside if adequate ground is timely presented by a person prejudiced by the sale.

It is proper practice for the court or judge possessing authority in the premises to confirm the sale where there are no valid grounds for a refusal to confirm,²⁵ but not where the court rendering the

Notice of levy

Under statute providing that when execution shall be levied on realty not then charged with lien of judgment on which execution issued, it is duty of officer making levy to file a notice of levy, where liens on certain described lots were perfected by decrees in mechanics' lien proceedings, it was not necessary for sheriff to file a notice of levy upon lots prior to sale, since such notice is required only where judgment is not already a lien on the property—Rosenzweig v Ferguson, 158 S W 2d 124, 348 Mo 1144

The sale will not be set aside, unless adequate grounds therefor are presented²⁸ by a person prejudiced by the sale,²⁹ and the motion made or action brought for this purpose is timely,³⁰ and notice thereof is given to lienors who have become the purchasers of the property.³¹

§ 343. Conveyance to Purchaser and Recovery of Purchase Money

A deed conveying the owner's interest in the property to the purchaser should be executed by the officer making the sale. Such officer may sue to recover the purchase money.

Where the sale is made by the sheriff, he is bound to execute to the purchaser a deed of conveyance of the owner's interest in the premises.³² The officer who made the sale can maintain an action against the purchaser for the purchase money,³³

A sale of the property in a mechanic's lien proceeding vests the purchaser with all of the title and interest of the defendant owner.

the title and interest of defendant owner,³⁷ the title of the purchaser relates back to the time when the lien attached,³⁸ so that he takes all the title or interest held by the owner at that time³⁹ or which he subsequently acquired,⁴⁰ and any interest acquired thereafter by a person claiming under the owner⁴¹

A sale to one of the lien claimants, unredeemed from by the owner, frees the property of the lien, and from the date of the sale the purchaser's rights are those of purchaser only, independent of the lien⁴² However, where the sole lienor is the purchaser, he acquires only the interest to which his lien attached⁴³ Under some statutes, where there are several concurrent mechanics' liens, a sale of the premises under one of such liens frees the premises of all⁴⁴

which he had no notice,⁴⁵ but not of rights or equities of which he was charged with notice⁴⁶ He has the right to defend against a mortgage on the property on the ground of its invalidity⁴⁷ Also, he is subrogated to the rights of the lienors, under the statute, to have improvements contributed to by them sold to pay their claims, as against a mortgagee not a party to the foreclosure⁴⁸ The title of the purchaser may be impeached by a person not a party to the suit,⁴⁹ but on the sale being set aside the purchaser should be placed in statu quo⁵⁰

Possession In a proper case for such relief, the purchaser may be put into possession⁵¹ or relieved from completing his purchase⁵² according to the rules governing judicial sales generally, as discussed in Judicial Sales §§ 43, 48 The purchaser may seek possession by summary proceedings,⁵³ ejectment,⁵⁴ or a writ of assistance⁵⁵ Where the sale is null and void, it is proper to quash a writ of assistance previously granted⁵⁶ and to order the restoration of the premises to the owner⁵⁷

b. Effect of Errors or Defects in Proceedings

Under some statutes a purchaser does not obtain a good title unless every essential statutory step in the mechanic's lien proceedings has been duly taken. Under other statutes, a purchaser who is a stranger to the record is not, as a general rule, charged with errors in the proceedings of which he has no knowledge.

In some cases it is stated generally that the title of a purchaser at a sale under a mechanic's lien is purely statutory,⁵⁸ and its validity depends on every essential statutory step in the creation, continuance, or enforcement of the lien having been duly taken.⁵⁹ However, in other cases the rules laid down are not so broadly stated.⁶⁰ According to such authorities, where the lien claimant is the purchaser, a subsequent reversal or vacation of the judgment defeats his title⁶¹ without giving him a claim for improvements made by him after the purchase,⁶² but, where the purchaser is a stranger to the record, he is not chargeable with any error which may exist in the decree under which he purchases,⁶³ particularly nonjurisdictional defects of which he has no actual knowledge,⁶⁴ and his title is not affected by the granting of a new trial after the sale,⁶⁵ or by a subsequent reversal or vacation of the judgment directing the sale,⁶⁶ where no order for the restitution of the property was made.⁶⁷

Where, because of real or alleged defects in the proceedings, the title is doubtful and the purchaser might be compelled to defend it by litigation, he will not be compelled to take it,⁶⁸ but the mere fact that one defendant has appealed does not entitle the purchaser to be relieved from the purchase.⁶⁹

§ 345. — Purchaser of Building Alone

As a general rule the purchaser of a building, separate from the land, sold to enforce a mechanic's lien on the building, may remove it within a reasonable time.

Where the judgment or decree establishes a lien on the building alone, separate from the land, and orders it sold, the purchaser has a right to remove it⁷⁰ within a reasonable time,⁷¹ and, if he cannot obtain possession otherwise, he may maintain replevin therefor.⁷² It has been held that the building cannot be removed before the expiration of the time 'of redemption'⁷³ According to some,⁷⁴ but not other,⁷⁵ authorities the right of removal exists regardless of whether or not injury may result from its exercise. It is held that, where the building is on leased premises, and the lessee's right of removal is conditional or limited, the purchaser's right is likewise so;⁷⁶ but it has also been held that a statutory right of removal may properly be exercised notwithstanding the expiration of the lease⁷⁷ and the passing of the premises into the possession of the owner of the fee or another lessee⁷⁸

The purchaser acquires the building free from a prior encumbrance on the land,⁷⁹ and he does not, by remaining in possession of the land until a prior mortgage is foreclosed, lose his right to remove the building or improvement from the land⁸⁰ The real purchaser of the building cannot be prejudiced by the erroneous recital of the sheriff in his return of sale that the building was sold to another person⁸¹

§ 346. Title and Rights of Third Persons

does not affect the title or interest of persons not parties to the foreclosure proceedings

As a general rule, a sale under a mechanic's lien does not affect the title or interest of persons not parties to the foreclosure proceedings⁸² In some cases it has been held generally that the sale discharges the lien of a subsequent,⁸³ but not of a prior,⁸⁴ mortgage In other cases, however, it has been held, in accordance with the general rule as to persons not made parties, that the sale does not affect the rights or equities of a subsequent mortgagee not made a party to the foreclosure proceedings,⁸⁵ but that it divests the lien of a prior mortgage where the mortgagee was made a party to the suit,⁸⁶ even though the decree makes no reference to the mortgage⁸⁷ and is silent as to the proceeds of the sale⁸⁸

§ 347. Redemption

A sale by special master in suit to foreclose materialman's liens closed all equity of redemption of the owners, and deed executed by owners to purchaser at foreclosure sale was of no effect further than an estoppel to thereafter claiming an interest in the land—Meyer v Bricklayers, Masons & Plasterers Union, Local No 7, 198 So 78, 144 Fla 401

Holders of notes secured by subordinate trust deed, who foreclosed trust deed and bought property in after suit to foreclose mechanic's lien had been filed, but before sale in mechanic's lien foreclosure, had no right, while sale stands, to redeem property from subsidiary of mechanic's lien claimant which had acquired property at sale in pro-

Where created by statute, the right of redemption must be exercised in substantial conformity with the statute,⁹² and, where so exercised, cannot be denied by the court⁹³. In order to be effective the statutory right of redemption must be exercised within the time⁹⁴ and in the mode or manner⁹⁵ provided by law, and the person exercising, or attempting to exercise, the right must be within the class of persons to whom the statute accords the right⁹⁶. Payment of the proper amount is necessary to effect a redemption,⁹⁷ but a tender of the amount necessary to redeem is not always a necessary condition precedent to the institution of a suit in equity to redeem⁹⁸. If under a decree of strict foreclosure on a mechanic's lien, with judgment for possession and stay of execution until after the day limited for redemption by the last in order of several junior encumbrancers, the latter redeems within the time limited, he cannot take any benefit from the judgment for possession⁹⁹.

Persons entitled to redeem Generally the right of redemption exists only in favor of a person who has an interest in the land sold,¹ the security and ceeding to foreclose mechanic's lien, nor could holders require mechanic's lien claimant or subsidiary to compensate them for their loss—Uhrig v Hill-Behan Lumber Co., 110 S W 2d 412, 341 Mo 851

Power of court to fix time

(1) In the absence of statutory provision, the court cannot extend the statutory time within which real property must be redeemed from a sale made in proceedings to foreclose a mechanic's lien—State v Kerr, 53 N W 719, 51 Minn 417

(2) Some statutes give the court power to fix a time to redeem other than that specified—Saginaw Lumber Co v Wilkinson, 254 N W 240, 266 Mich 661

(3) Under such a statute, where defendant appealed from decree foreclosing mechanic's lien before beginning of period fixed by the court in which sale might be held, defendant was given reasonable time to redeem after affirmance of decree on appeal, though time fixed by trial

An assignee of a contract for sale of realty who had taken without notice, either actual or constructive, of forfeiture of contract by vendor's grantee, was entitled to redeem after sale of property under first mechanic's lien as against contention that conveyance from purchaser to purchaser's assignee was ineffective to convey title—Murray v Kelroy, 275 N W 21, 223 Iowa 1331

(1) The lessee has no right, under some statutes, to redeem from the sale of a building—Wildman v Evans Bros Construction Co., 57 So 831, 175 Ala 333—40 C J p 510 note 15 [a]

(2) Under other statutes, however, a tenant occupying the premises sold

protection of which render the right of redemption necessary,³ and his bill to redeem must show on its face that he possesses the proper interest³

Under some statutes, the judgment debtor⁴ or his assignee or transferee⁵ has a prior right to redeem from the sale, which is not cut off by the existence of a mortgage, the holder of which is given a secondary right to redeem⁶ Foreclosure of the mortgage, however, does cut off the judgment debtor's right to redeem from the mechanic's lien sale after expiration of the time to redeem from the mortgage foreclosure sale⁷

A junior mechanic's lienholder may redeem from a sale under the senior lien,⁸ provided, under some statutes, he has reduced his lien to judgment,⁹ and exercises his right within the time specified,¹⁰ and, where a sale is made under one of two coordinate mechanics' liens, the other lienholder has the right to redeem¹¹

A junior mortgagee who was not made a party to the suit to foreclose a mechanic's lien has the right to redeem the premises from the sale,¹² and such right extends also to his assignee¹³ or the purchaser at a foreclosure sale under his mortgage¹⁴ However, a mortgagee not made a party to the foreclosure proceedings need not file a bill to redeem from the sale in order to enforce his rights,¹⁵ he may file a bill to foreclose his mortgage as if no mechanics' lien proceedings had been taken,¹⁶ and the facts that he does so and obtains a decree of sale do not prevent him from subsequently redeeming from the mechanic's lien¹⁷

It has been held that a simple judgment creditor has no right, after the execution of a sheriff's deed under a sale on foreclosure of a prior mechanic's lien, to redeem from the sale,¹⁸ but under some statutes judgment creditors have a right to redeem after the expiration of a certain time during which the judgment debtor has not redeemed,¹⁹ although, even in jurisdictions where such statutes exist, where a sale to foreclose a mechanic's lien is void for want of jurisdiction, judgment creditors cannot obtain any rights by redeeming from such sale²⁰

It has been held that a party to the foreclosure proceedings cannot redeem from his own sale²¹ However, under a statute permitting redemption by the owner of the senior lien subsequent to the mechanic's lien on which the sale was held, the mechanic's lienor, whose judgment has been only partially satisfied by the sale, can redeem where he records a

(3) A tenant whose interest in the land and in a structure placed thereon by him was sold to enforce a mechanic's lien may redeem from the sale as a sale of realty, notwithstanding his right to remove the structure from the premises on termination of the lease and the sheriff's return stated that he had sold personal property—J B Ehlram & Sons Mfg Co v Rice, supra

after discharging the lien are in custodia legis,²⁹ and the sheriff holds such funds subject to the orders of the court³⁰ which determines the proper distribution thereof³¹ While in such custody the funds are not subject to an independent attachment or writ of execution³² Where part of the proceeds belonging to the legal owner is, pursuant to the decree, deposited in court to await its further orders, the court has power to order taxes due on the property before sale paid out of such proceeds³³

An auditor, appointed to distribute the fund arising from the sale of the property described in the mechanics' liens on which judgments have been recovered, cannot restrict the liens to a portion of such property, on the ground that the curtilage des-

It has been held that claimants to the fund realized from a sale of the premises may contest a lien claim not reduced to judgment³⁵ Some courts hold generally that a contesting creditor may, after the judgment and in the proceedings for distribution of the proceeds of sale, attack the validity of a mechanic's lien,³⁶ but other courts hold that it is too late for him to raise the issue unless for special cause shown³⁷

G. COSTS AND FEES

§ 350. In General

- a. Right to costs generally
- b. Tender, payment into court, or offer of judgment

a. Right to Costs Generally

The prevailing party in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien is generally entitled to costs, either under the mechanics' lien statutes or under general statutes relating to costs.

Although the mechanics' lien statutes ordinarily expressly provide for a recovery of costs in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien, the right to a recovery of costs may rest on the mechanics' lien statute or on the statutes relating generally to the form of remedy through which the lien is enforced,³⁸ and the amount and items of costs are controlled by general statutes, in the absence of a specification to the contrary.³⁹ A statutory limit on the Assignment of surplus

(1) If defendant in suit to foreclose materialman's liens was sole owner of property, he was vested with legal right to assign or dispose of his right to any surplus which might remain in hands of court after sale by special master, and such assignment might be effectively made either before or after sale of property under foreclosure—Meyer v Bricklayers, Masons & Plasterers Union, Local No 7, 198 So 78, 144 Fla 401

Extra allowance

(1) The language of a statute au-

amount of costs may not be exceeded⁴⁰ Costs will not be taxed for unnecessary expenses, unless the court is required to tax them by an affirmative provision of the law⁴¹

In accordance with general rules, the prevailing party is ordinarily entitled to his costs,⁴² although the proceedings may be equitable in nature, since the statute as to costs controls and the rule which would otherwise prevail in equity does not apply⁴³ The statutes sometimes make the costs in mechanics' lien cases a matter for the discretion of the court,⁴⁴ in the exercise of which the costs are also ordinarily assessed against the losing party⁴⁵

In equity in a proper case the costs may be apportioned⁴⁶ between necessary parties,⁴⁷ and the court in adjusting costs will consider the reasonableness or good faith of the claim where it is filed for a larger amount than is found due⁴⁸

The costs which may be taxed against a party to a proceeding are those only which are incident to the particular contest in which he is engaged⁴⁹ Where one is not liable on the issue of debt raised in a foreclosure suit, but is a proper party to the contest in respect of the right to foreclose, as one claiming an interest in the property under a lien for purchase money, it is proper to adjudge costs against him and his codefendant on a judgment for foreclosure,⁵⁰ but prior encumbrancers are not liable for costs,⁵¹ and, being summoned in as required by statute and purchasing the property at the master's sale for less than the mortgage debt, a prior encumbrancer is entitled to the proceeds without deduction for any costs except the expenses of the sale⁵² Where claimant recovers, one who defends in the place of the owner is not entitled to be re-

thorizing an extra allowance in an action to compel determination of a claim to real property is given a restricted meaning and held not to apply to an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien—Wright v Reusens, 15 NYS 504, 60 Hun 585

imbursed for his costs, expenses, and attorney's fees⁵³

Where the amount of the recovery is a factor in determining the right to costs, interest awarded in the foreclosure proceedings constitutes a part of the recovery for such purpose⁵⁴

Personal judgment. The lienor who succeeds may recover costs against the owner of the property, since the liability of the owner personally is subject to his liability for a personal judgment in any event⁵⁵ Where plaintiff fails to establish his lien but recovers a personal judgment, it has been held that the rule of costs should be the same as if the action had originally been one for a money judgment⁵⁶

Prayer Where claimant shows himself to be entitled to a decree for the relief prayed, he may have a decree for costs, although they may not have been specifically demanded⁵⁷

Payment The court may direct that the costs be paid out of the fund held for distribution⁵⁸

b. Tender, Payment into Court, or Offer of Judgment

In a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien the right to costs may be affected by a tender, an offer of judgment, or a payment into court.

Where a good tender of the full amount has been made prior to the filing of the lien and has been refused, plaintiff cannot recover costs⁵⁹ or attorney's fees,⁶⁰ but costs will be awarded to defendant⁶¹ However, where a defense of tender is not disposed of, neither plaintiff nor defendant has any right to have his costs taxed as against the other⁶²

Where defendant offers judgment, if the judgment recovered by plaintiff is more favorable than that offered, defendant is liable for costs⁶³ An offer of judgment is equivalent to an offer that the lien may be enforced for the sum specified, and, if less is recovered, defendant will recover costs accruing after the offer⁶⁴

A subcontractor cannot recover costs as against the owner where the owner has at all times been ready and willing to pay the amount due the contractor, and the subcontractor's recovery cannot exceed such amount.⁶⁵

Payment into court Where the mechanic's lien statute makes a provision for a deposit of money by the owner in court to take the place of the property and to be subjected to the lien, such a provision supplants a general statute as to offer of judgment in actions generally⁶⁶ An offer of judgment not in the form prescribed by the Lien Law may be presumed to have been under a general statute⁶⁷

§ 351. Consolidation of Proceedings; Joinder of All Lienholders

Where the statute requires all liens to be disposed of in one action, only the lienholder who instituted the action has been held entitled to costs

Where it is the intention of the statute that there shall be but one action brought, to which all the lienholders shall be made parties, it has been held that only the lienholder who brings the action is entitled to costs⁶⁸ Where independent suits are brought by separate claimants through the same attorney, all the costs made in the suit which is consolidated with the action as prosecuted should be awarded against both claimants,⁶⁹ and the owner should not be charged with the costs in both suits.⁷⁰ A claimant should not be deprived of his right to a hearing in court on the question of the settlement of the legal costs which he has incurred,⁷¹ and,

where several lien suits are consolidated and, on the motion of one claimant who was not given notice of the setting of the case for trial, a new trial is granted conditionally, unless the amount due such claimant is deposited in court, such claimant should be allowed to file a cross bill and establish the amount to which it is entitled in addition to its claim of lien.⁷² Where a materialman brings his action on behalf of himself and such other lienors as contribute to the expense of the action, costs to such lienors as prevail in the actions are borne equally by the defendant owner and the materialman who failed to establish his lien.⁷³ Fees for filing accounts allowed to subcontractors should be deducted from the amount found due from the owner to the contractor.⁷⁴

Dismissal as to owner. All those subcontractors, parties defendant, who, after appearance and proof of their claims, there being no contest between themselves, without objection by the contractor, have allowed their liens to expire during the pendency of the action without an order of the court continuing them, should be dismissed as to the owners, with costs, as for want of prosecution, but should have judgment against the contractor for their claim, and costs as on failure to answer.⁷⁵

Separate bills. Where different claimants fail to establish their liens in the action or to recover personal judgments, costs may be awarded against all, but the owner will not be entitled to a separate bill against each claimant.⁷⁶

§ 352. Filing and Recording Fees; Abstract

The cost of filing and recording the lien is allowable under some statutes

Where the statute so provides, the lienor may recover the costs incurred by him for filing and recording his lien,⁷⁷ but, where the statute does not cover such items, the court may not allow any sum for the preparation and verification of the lien,⁷⁸ or for the abstract of title to the property covered by the lien.⁷⁹ Under some of the statutes the allowance of the cost of filing and recording the lien is a matter for the discretion of the court.⁸⁰ The lienor may recover the costs of filing his lien only if he succeeds in its enforcement.⁸¹ Where under the circumstances no lien could be acquired, an allowance may not be made of a filing fee.⁸²

§ 353. Attorney's Fees

Attorney's fees may be allowed to the prevailing party where the contract or statute provides therefor.

In the absence of an agreement of the parties therefor,⁸³ the allowance of an attorney's fee depends entirely on statutory authority without which such an item forms no part of the proper recovery in these proceedings.⁸⁴ A mechanic's lien holder, however, may recover attorney's fees from his obligor where the contract between them provides therefor,⁸⁵ but one not a party to such a contract may not be held liable for attorney's fees thereunder.⁸⁶

An award of attorney's fees may also be made where provision therefor is made by a valid enactment,⁸⁷ and, while the validity of statutes authorizing the recovery of attorney's fees by a successful lien claimant has frequently been denied,⁸⁸ such statutes have also been upheld,⁸⁹ more particularly where they allow a recovery by either party if successful.⁹⁰ Under a statute which permits the court to allow costs and disbursements to a prevailing lien holder, it has been held that an allowance of attorney's fees may be made,⁹¹ and the statute as so construed has been held valid.⁹² In any event a statute providing for attorney's fees will not be given a retroactive effect as to contracts entered into before its enactment,⁹³ or as to proceedings arising under earlier statutes.⁹⁴

Under some of the statutes, the allowance of attorney's fees as part of the costs is a matter for the discretion of the court, the statute not being considered mandatory.⁹⁵ Ordinarily attorney's fees cannot be recovered by a lien claimant, unless he is successful in his suit,⁹⁶ and under some statutes

claim¹⁶ So, where a contractor is entitled to a personal judgment and not to a lien, it is error to render a judgment for attorney's fees¹⁷ However, reasonable attorney's fees may be allowed to defendant as the prevailing party, where the lienor's claim to a lien was disallowed as discharged, although a personal judgment was allowed for the amount of the debt¹⁸

13. Definitions and illustrations

(1) "Median, the point on a statistical scale of the distribution of cases, above which and below which lie exactly 50% of the cases The median is thus a measure of 'central tendency' It has the advantage over the arithmetical mean or 'average' that it is not affected by unusually high or low values of the variable For instance, given the values of 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 100, the median is 6, and the arithmetic mean is 19 For some purposes the median value better describes the central tendency of such a series"—In re Flint, supra.

MEDIASTINITIS. An inflammation of the cell tissue lining the area in the middle of the chest between the pleurae ¹⁴

MEDIATE. Acting by means, or by an intervening cause or instrument; acting or suffering through an intervening agent or condition, not direct or immediate ¹⁵

MEDIATION. Intervention; interposition; the act of a third person who interferes between two contending parties with a view to reconcile them or persuade them to adjust or settle their dispute ¹⁶

Mediation in international law see International Law § 22; in labor relation controversies see Master and Servant § 28 (2), § 28 (73).

MEDIATOR. One who interposes between parties at variance for the purpose of reconciling them ¹⁷

MEDICAL. Of, pertaining to, or dealing with, the healing art, or the science of medicine, especially in the narrower sense ¹⁸

The word "medical" is treated in various connections throughout this work, particular reference being made to the indexes to the titles Criminal Law, Food, Evidence, and Insurance. For other references consult the Descriptive-Word Index and see Medicine post

Phrases employing the word are set out in the note, ¹⁹ and for other phrases as to which more recent adjudications have not been found see 40 C.J. p 625 note 27—p 626 note 32

MEDICINA. A Latin word meaning medicine ²⁰

MEDICINAL. Curative or alleviative; used for the cure or alleviation of bodily disorders ²¹

Medicinal preparations may be put in various forms, such as liquids, tablets, capsules, or powders.

(2) "The median. The median measure may be defined as the middle or central item when the values are arranged in order of magnitude. If there is an odd number of items it is definitely determined. But if the group has an even number of items an additional convention is needed, if the two centrally placed items are distinguishable, a value half-way between them is usually taken as the median. This measure can often be found without resort to arithmetic. For example, the median height of a class may be found by proceeding as follows: Arrange the students according to height, then march them off by twos, the tallest with the shortest, the next to the tallest with the next to the shortest, and so on. The last person or pair of persons will have the median height, which can then be marked on the blackboard. Unlike the arithmetic mean, the median is clearly unaffected by extreme variations at the ends of the range. If the tallest student in the room were replaced by a giant, or the shortest by a midget, no change would result in the median. For problems pertaining to wages, gifts, taxes, etc., it is usually more informative to use medians than arithmetic means. If a class of one thousand alumni gave a total of $14,997 to their Alma Mater, the class contributed $15 each 'on the average'. But if one person gave $12,000 and the other 999 gave $3 each, the median donation ($3) would be more descriptive of individual contributions than the arithmetic mean."—In re Flint, supra.

(3) "In addition to the arithmetic mean, which has been discussed, two other statistical constants are sometimes used to describe the characteristics of a distribution. If a number of individuals differ with respect to a measurable characteristic, they can be arranged in order corresponding to the order of magnitude of the characteristic observed. The median can then be defined as the value of the characteristic which corresponds to the individual in the middle of the series. There will thus be equal numbers of individuals having forms of characteristics higher and lower than the median. Where the individuals are so numerous that they are grouped in classes, the position of the midmost individual can generally be found by interpolation, if the limits of the characteristic for the group are known. When there is an even number of individuals, the value of the median is taken to be half-way between the values of the characteristic pertaining to the two individuals who stand nearest to the middle of the series."—In re Flint, supra.

MEDICINE. A technical²³ and generic²⁴ term, derived from "medeor"²⁵ It has frequently been defined by eminent lexicographers of medical words and terms,²⁶ and is susceptible of two distinct meanings.²⁷

In one sense the word signifies a science or profession, and this meaning is treated in the CJS title Physicians and Surgeons § 1, also 40 C.J. p 627 notes 69-89

In its other distinctive sense, the word signifies a drug,²⁸ indicating nothing more than a remedial agent that has the property of curing or mitigating diseases, or is used for that purpose,²⁹ and in its ordinary sense, as applied to human ailments, it means something which is administered, either internally or externally, in the treatment of disease or the relief of sickness.³⁰ In this sense the word "medicine" is variously defined as a remedial agent,³¹ a remedy,³² a physic,³³ a medicament;³⁴ any substance or preparation used in treating disease,³⁵ articles intended for use in the diagnosis, cure, medication, treatment, or prevention of disease in man or other animals,³⁶ a substance supposed to possess curative or remedial properties,³⁷ a combination of drugs in largely varying proportions.³⁸

There are many things, not in themselves medicines, but which may be put to a medicinal use, and when so used they may become medicines.³⁹ Thus electricity, conveyed by instruments or by human hands, may be a medicine.⁴⁰ The fact that the substance employed as a remedial agent may have value as a food, and a tendency to build up and restore wasted or diseased tissue, will not deprive it of its character as a "medicine," if it is administered and employed for that purpose.⁴¹ On the other hand, there are a great many articles which, under certain circumstances and conditions, may possess some medicinal properties, but they are not classed as "medicine," as the word is generally used and

"It is common knowledge that certain foods are prescribed in the dietary treatment of disease, and while the article thus falls within the broad limit of the definition, I cannot conceive that it thus is transformed into a medicine ipso facto. Strict signification

The terms "meet" and "pass" are used in their strict signification, and are intended to apply only where travelers are approaching each other.

nary and popular meaning of the word ⁶⁰ The term has been similarly defined to mean to come together by mutual approach; to fall in with another, to come face to face, to converge,⁶¹ and, with a slightly different shade of meaning, to come together with hostile purpose, to have an encounter or conflict ⁶² In a different sense, the word means to come into conformity to; to be or act in agreement with ⁶³ When used with reference to financial obligation, to pay.⁶⁴

As an adjective. Fit or suitable ⁶⁵

Meeting

As a noun A number of people having a common duty or function who have come together for any legal purpose, or the transaction of business of a common interest; an assemblage ⁶⁶

The word "meeting" may be used as synonymous with "session,"⁶⁷ but when the word "session" is used in its literal sense of "sitting" as discussed in the C J S. definition Session, the terms are distinguishable ⁶⁸ In distinguishing between the meaning of the word "meeting" and the literal meaning of the word "session" it has been said that a meeting may run for a day with a morning session, an adjournment for lunch, an afternoon session, an adjournment for dinner, and then an evening session, or it may run for several days with one or more sessions each day, such sessions clearly being but sittings of the meeting ⁶⁹ On the other hand, the meeting may embrace but one session, or the meeting, though extending over several days, may be called the session of the body which is meeting ⁷⁰

In anatomy. A member is a part or organ of the animal body,⁸⁵ a part appurtenant to the body,⁸⁶ a subordinate part of the main body,⁸⁷ a limb⁸⁸ or other separable part⁸⁹ or other functional organ of an animal body,⁹⁰ as an arm, a leg, or a private part.⁹¹ It has been said that in common usage the term "member," as applied to the human body, means the extremities of the body and particularly the arms and legs.⁹²

What constitutes a member of the body with reference to the crime of mayhem is treated in Mayhem § 3. The loss of members of the body with reference to policies of accident insurance is treated in Insurance §§ 898 d, 900 b. The compensation scheduled under the various workmen's compensation acts for total or partial loss of members of the body, or for loss of use of members of the body, is treated in the C.J.S. title Workmen's Compensation Acts §§ 311-314 also 71 C.J. p 839 note 13-p 847 note 12.

MENACE. While the word “menace” is generally regarded as synonymous with “threat,” and is sometimes used as synonymous with “threat by word of mouth” as discussed in the C.J.S. title Threats and Unlawful Communications § 1, also 40 C.J. p 631 notes 33, 35, it may have other meanings,²³ and it may signify something more than mere words²⁴

As a noun The word “menace” has been defined as meaning a threat²⁵ or something that threatens or has the effect of threatening to cause evil or harm;²⁶ an impending evil,²⁷ that which menaces,²⁸ the indication of probable evil or catastrophe to come,²⁹ the show of an intention to inflict evil³⁰ Any overt act of a threatening character, short of an actual assault, is a menace³¹

In several jurisdictions “menace” is defined by statute as consisting in a threat of duress or the threat of injury to the character of particular persons,³² and a threat of imprisonment for an unlawful purpose constitutes a menace within the meaning of such statutes³³ Under such statutes menace arises by virtue of some unlawful action on the part of some person,³⁴ and the threat which is necessary to constitute menace must be more than some statement or act from which a guilty person becomes apprehensive of prosecution,³⁵ since it is the threat and not the apprehension which makes out the menace, and that threat must be an unlawful and invalid one³⁶

Menace in the law of contracts see Contracts § 175, and as grounds for divorce see Divorce § 17 As insufficient to constitute an assault see Assault and Battery § 60

As a verb To act in a threatening manner³⁷

MENAGE. A domestic establishment; a household, domestic management, housekeeping³⁹

MENAGERIE. See the C.J.S. title Theaters and Shows § 1

MEND. To free from faults or defects; to set right; to correct⁴⁰ “Mend” has been held synonymous with “repair”⁴¹

MENDIGO. In Spanish law, mendicant, beggar⁴³

MENESTRAL. In Spanish law, a mechanic⁴⁴

MENIAL. It has been said that the word “menial” is derived from the old French “meiny” or “many,” “mesnie,”⁴⁵ and that in its true sense it relates to domestic servants⁴⁶

taining to the business of merchants, and is concerned with trade or buying and selling of merchandise⁸⁶

The word "mercantile" signifies the same thing as "trading,"⁸⁷ and has been compared with "trade"⁸⁸

Mercantile purpose The term "mercantile purpose" has been held to cover the sale of liquors,⁸⁹ but not to include the operation of a restaurant⁹⁰

Mercantile pursuits. A term with a well-defined meaning in law⁹¹ It necessarily carries with it the idea of traffic, the buying of something from another, or the selling of something to another, and is allied to trade.⁹² It implies operations conducted with a view of realizing the profits which come from a skillful purchase, barter, speculation, and sale,⁹³ and refers to the buying and selling of goods or merchandise, or dealing in the purchase and sale of commodities, and that, too, not occasionally or incidentally, but habitually as a business⁹⁴ The term is restricted to dealings in merchandise, goods, or chattels, the ordinary subjects of commerce⁹⁵ To be principally engaged in a mercantile pursuit one must be carrying on commerce in some of its branches⁹⁶ A mercantile pursuit is trading in the larger sense,⁹⁷ but generally the term has a slightly broader significance than the term "trading,"⁹⁸ since it has been said that trading is a mercantile pursuit, but all mercantile pursuits may not involve trading⁹⁹

For particular businesses, activities, or occupations which have been held not to be mercantile pursuits see 40 C J p 635 note 24 [a]-[c]

The term "mercantile pursuits" as used in an early bankruptcy statute allowing involuntary proceedings against corporations engaged principally in such pursuits is treated in Bankruptcy § 96

§ 1. Definition and Nature

A commercial or mercantile agency is a person, firm, or corporation engaged in the business of collecting information as to the financial standing, ability, and credit of persons engaged in business, and reporting such information to subscribers or customers applying and paying therefor.

The terms "commercial agency" and "mercantile agency" mean the same thing¹ A "commercial agency" or "mercantile agency" may be defined as a person, firm, or corporation engaged in the business of collecting information as to the financial standing, ability, and credit of persons engaged in business, and reporting such information to subscribers or customers applying and paying therefor.² Special commercial or mercantile agencies are those which confine themselves to reporting a particular

"Mercantile agent" has been distinguished from "commercial agency" or "mercantile agency"⁶

§ 2. Regulation and Control

Generally a mercantile agency may be required to take out a license and to pay a license tax

Generally the requirement of obtaining a license and payment of a license tax may be imposed on a mercantile agency⁷ them through the mails do not constitute interstate commerce, and such business is subject to state regulation, as discussed in Commerce § 31.

§ 3. Creation and Effect of Relation as between Agency and Its Subscribers

Generally the contract between a mercantile agency and the subscriber is construed strictly against the party who prepares it. The agency must comply with a contract provision for delivery of a credit guide or book in order to render the subscriber liable under the contract.

As in the case of contracts, generally, under rules stated in Contracts § 324, the contract between the agency and the subscriber is usually construed strictly against the party who prepares it.⁸ It has been held that a contract whereby the subscribers pay a money consideration must be given a construction which will entitle the subscribers to receive something which may be of assistance to them in determining whether or not to extend credit.⁹ Generally there must be due compliance by the agency with the provision of the contract for the delivery to the subscriber of a credit guide or book, in order to render the subscriber liable under the contract.¹⁰

§ 4. — Duty to Exercise Care and Diligence

In the absence of contractual obligation therefor, a mercantile agency does not guarantee the reliability of information furnished. While the agency may be liable for negligence in securing and communicating information it may limit its liability by contract provision, subject to the rule, sometimes recognized, that such provision is construed strictly against the agency.

In the absence of contractual obligation therefor, the agency by its contract to furnish the information does not guarantee the reliability of the information,¹¹ all that is required of the agency is that it make due and diligent inquiries in regard to the financial standing of the customer.¹² It has been stated broadly that, in the absence of fraud or deceit, the agency is answerable to the subscriber, with respect to information furnished, according to the terms of the contracts and to such terms only.¹³

According to some cases, unless exempted by contract, the agency may be liable for negligence in securing and communicating information.¹⁴

A mercantile agency may by contract protect itself from the consequence of errors in the collection and transmission of information by its officers or agents,¹⁵ but, according to some cases, such a limitation is construed strictly against the agency,¹⁶ and the rule that a contract by which the subscribers pay a money consideration must be given a construction which will entitle them to receive something which may be of assistance to them in determining whether or not to extend credit, as considered supra § 3, applies to the construction of the clause of a contract so limiting the liability of the agency as not to include wrongful information furnished through negligence.¹⁷ While it has been held that, where the contract stipulates that the agency shall not be responsible for any loss caused by the neglect of its agents, attorneys, clerks, or employees, in procuring, collecting, and communicating the information, the agency is not liable, whether the negligence of the agent or attorney, etc., is merely ordinary negligence¹⁸ or gross negligence,¹⁹ according to some cases, notwithstanding a contract provision that the agency shall not be liable for loss or injury caused by it or by any of its officers or agents in procuring, collecting, and communicating infor-

sociation, in that association contributed information to agency and in turn obtained service from agency on basis of charges fixed or approved by themselves—Merchants Red Book Co v State, 125 S W 2d 279, 132 Tex 470, answer to certified question conformed to, Civ App, 126 S W 2d 705

mation, the agency may be liable for false reports made knowingly²⁰ or as the result of gross mistakes or negligence²¹. It has been held that a contract stipulating for exemption from liability because of the negligence, etc., of the agency's agents, servants, etc., but not including the negligence of the agency itself, will not protect such an agency from liability for a loss occasioned by issuing its printed report with a gross error therein, where the information furnished by its agents was correct and the error occurred in the printing of the report, such error being regarded as that of the agency itself²². When it is stipulated that a mercantile agency shall not be liable for any loss or injury caused by neglect or other act of its officers or agents, in procuring, collecting, and communicating information, the agency cannot be held liable to subscribers for the consequences of misrepresentation, unless it is so grossly negligent in acquiring or communicating such information that its conduct in effect amounts to a fraud,²³ and a like rule has been recognized with respect to such a provision exempting from liability, which includes the neglect or act of the agency as well as that of its officers or agents²⁴.

Guaranteeing reliability of information The agency may guarantee the accuracy of its information,²⁵ agreeing to pay a fixed sum, up to the amount of any loss which should be sustained by reason of the inaccuracy of the information,²⁶ the damages to be paid not to exceed the amount of loss actually sustained by its subscriber²⁷.

§ 5. — Scope of Use of Information

A mercantile agency is not liable for an injury suffered by a subscriber from a use of the information outside his legitimate business, where the contract limits the use of the information to the subscriber's legitimate business.

If the contract confines or limits the use that may be made of the information by the subscriber to that of his legitimate business, the agency is not liable for damages suffered by the subscriber from a use of the information foreign to his legitimate business²⁸.

§ 6. Effect of Relation as between Subscribers and Third Persons

Under some circumstances, patrons of a mercantile agency may be entitled to relief and redress with respect to statements and representations of others made to the agency, and may claim an estoppel in that regard.

Since statements and representations made to a mercantile agency are intended as much for the patrons of the agency as for the agency,²⁹ the patrons will be entitled to relief and redress when they rely and act on such statements and representations to their injury.³⁰ When such statements and representations are communicated to a patron or the agency as being the statements and representations of the person making them, the patron relying and acting on them is in a position to claim an estoppel³¹. It has been held that the person making the statements to the agency is liable not merely for his own statements, but also for the rating assigned by the agency, based on such statements³².

It has been held that the right to rely and act on statements and representations made to a mercantile agency is not general or common to all persons who may have patronized the agency,³³ and that the right is limited and confined to the persons for whom such statements and representations are intended,³⁴ namely, those who have occasion to ap-

§ 7. Effect of Relation as between Agency and Third Persons

A mercantile agency may be entitled to redress with respect to the wrongful use by a nonsubscriber of information furnished to subscribers by the agency

Since the information supplied by a mercantile agency is confidential between it and its subscribers, the agency may be entitled to redress with respect to the unauthorized use thereof by a nonsubscriber.³⁶

§ 8. Actions by or against Agencies

A subscriber who has extended credit to a third person on the faith of erroneous information furnished by a mercantile agency need not sue such third person before bringing an action against the agency, where such third person is insolvent.

It is not essential that a subscriber, who has extended credit to a third person on the faith of erroneous information furnished by the agency, should bring an action against such third person before bringing an action against the agency where such third person is insolvent³⁷

Where the evidence is such as to justify a finding of gross negligence and of constructive fraud on the part of defendant agency, plaintiff subscriber is entitled to have the issues submitted to the jury.³⁸

MERCAPTANS. Mercaptans may be broadly described as organic compounds having sulfide atoms. They are divided into two broad classes which are commonly spoken of as simple mercaptans and substituted mercaptans¹

MERCENARY. One who is hired or paid for his work; a hireling, now only a soldier hired into foreign service.²

In General

The word "merchandise" is derived from the Latin "merx,"⁴ and came into use as a term to designate the goods and wares exposed to sale in fairs and markets.⁵ It is a very broad⁶ and comprehensive⁷ term, having a wide,⁸ well-defined,⁹ and very extended¹⁰ meaning, and, in common understand-

Simple mercaptan

A simple mercaptan is an organic substance stemming from an alcohol, in which the hydroxyl group has been replaced by one hydrogen sulphide group (HS)—Sales Affiliates v Hutzler Bros Co, supra.

Substituted mercaptan

A substituted mercaptan is a simple mercaptan in which one or more of the hydrogen atoms have been replaced by some other atom or groups of atoms. Substituted mercaptans are again divisible into those of the nonpolar group which in solution do not ionize, that is, do not, when put in solution, break down into electrically charged particles, both positive and negative, known as ions, and those of the polar group which do ionize in solution. This latter group includes both those of the acid-acting kind and those of the basic-acting kind—Sales Affiliates v Hutzler Bros Co, supra.

The term is also defined as meaning things which are ordinarily bought and sold,²⁸ anything movable,²⁹ anything customarily bought and sold for profit,³⁰ any movable object of trade or traffic,³¹ any article which is the object of commerce, or which may be bought or sold in trade;³² the staple of a mercantile business,³³ that which is passed from hand to hand by purchase and sale³⁴

In a more restricted sense the term is defined as meaning something that is sold every day, and is constantly going out of the store and being replaced by other goods,³⁵ goods which are kept in stock for sale and, on being sold, are replaced by other goods³⁶

At one time the word "merchandise" was applicable only to those articles kept in stock and sold by people generally known as merchants³⁷ The term is still used to denote all those things which merchants sell,³⁸ either at wholesale³⁹ or retail,⁴⁰ as dry goods, hardware, groceries, drugs, etc.⁴¹

However, in modern usage the word has a broader meaning,⁴² and now covers all kinds of personal property which is bought and sold in the market⁴³ Thus it embraces all articles of commerce,⁴⁴ every article of traffic,⁴⁵ which is properly embraced in a commercial regulation,⁴⁶ foreign or domestic⁴⁷

While, as stated in the previous subdivision, the word "merchandise" is broad and comprehensive, it is subject to certain limitations and restrictions.⁴⁸ Although it is sufficiently comprehensive to include every tangible species of personal property,⁴⁹ it is usually applied to personal chattels only,⁵⁰ and to those which are not required for food or immediate support,⁵¹ but such as remain after having been used⁵² or which are used only by a slow consumption⁵³ The term is also limited to subjects of commerce, goods, wares, and commodities, having a sensible intrinsic value,⁵⁴ and ordinarily is applied only to articles having an intrinsic value in bulk, weight, or measure, and which are bought and sold⁵⁵ The fact that a thing is sometimes bought and sold does not make it merchandise,⁵⁶ the term being usually if not universally limited to things that are ordinarily bought and sold, the subjects of commerce and traffic.⁵⁷ When not otherwise limited the word "merchandise" includes commercial commodities in general, whatever their nature.⁵⁸ It usually conveys the idea of personalty used by merchants in the course of trade,⁵⁹ and is usually, if not universally, applied to property which has not yet reached the hands of the consumer⁶⁰ Under some circumstances, when the term is employed to describe the goods of a merchant, it may properly be limited to goods intended for sale⁶¹ On the other hand, the word may cover property intended for use and not for sale,⁶² particularly where it is used to describe the goods of some person other than a merchant⁶³

Literally, the word "merchandise" connotes something tangible,⁶⁴ such as goods, wares, commodities,⁶⁵ as distinguished from intangibles, such as choses in action, credits, rights, services⁶⁶ As usually defined, the word refers to tangible physical objects⁶⁷ or articles,⁶⁸ and is limited to tangible property which may be the subject of sale⁶⁹ Thus, as a general rule, mere evidences of value⁷⁰ such as an-

The term "merchant" is more comprehensively defined as a person engaged in buying and selling merchandise at a fixed place of business, which business is conducted in his name, and who, during the time he claims to be engaged as a merchant, does not engage in the performance of any manual labor, except such as is necessary in the conduct of his business as such merchant.¹⁷ This statutory definition, which is contained in the Chinese Exclusion Acts and is considered and construed as used in the acts in Aliens § 41, has been adopted and treated as a general definition of the word "merchant"¹⁸

The word "merchant" may be applied to a retailer, and the term has been defined as meaning one who carries on a retail business¹⁹ On the other hand, the term is equally applicable to a wholesaler, and, expressing this idea, is defined as one who buys and sells in quantity or by wholesale,²⁰ one who trafficks or carries on trade, especially on a large scale²¹ To the concept of wholesale or large scale dealing there is sometimes added the element of foreign trading, and the term is defined as meaning one who trafficks or carries on trade with foreign countries, or who exports and imports goods and sells them by wholesale,²² one who trafficks on a large scale, especially with foreign countries²³

With reference to the keeping of a store or shop or fixed place of business, the term "merchant" is defined as meaning one who buys to sell, or buys and sells, goods or merchandise in a store or shop,²⁴ one who keeps a store or shop for the sale of goods,²⁵ a shopkeeper,²⁶ a storekeeper,²⁷ one who has a place of sale and stock of goods²⁸ requiring the purchase of articles to be sold again, either in the same or in an improved state³⁰ —Particular Elements.

Buying and selling There is considerable conflict in the decisions with respect to whether, in order to be a merchant, a person must buy as well as sell. From the usual dictionary definitions of the term and those from many other authorities it would seem that two essentials are necessary to constitute one a merchant in the ordinary meaning of the word,³¹ namely, that he must buy³² and sell,³³ and that he must keep a shop or store for that purpose, as is discussed in the following subdivision. However, not every one who buys and sells is a merchant,³⁴ and one who simply manufactures an article and sells it is not a merchant,³⁵ and one who buys without selling again,³⁶ or who sells without having bought,³⁷ as where one sells products of his own labor,³⁸ is not usually termed a merchant.

There are cases which indicate that buying and selling are not essential to constitute a person a merchant, and, while ordinarily a merchant buys as well as sells,³⁹ it has been said that one would be a merchant if his business consisted in buying without selling,⁴⁰ and he might be a merchant by simple selling,⁴¹ since instead of buying he could manufacture or compound the commodity he sells.⁴²

In determining whether a person who sells a commodity which he manufactures is or is not a merchant regard must be had to the distinction between the terms "merchant" and "manufacturer" treated in Manufactures § 1 b (2), where it is said that a person may be both a manufacturer and a merchant, and a manufacturer may be a merchant if he buys and sells goods, or if he buys the raw material and works it into a finished form, or if he pursues any course of business by which a dealer's profit is added to that of the manufacturer

A merchant, ordinarily at least, does not resell to the same class of persons from whom he buys; he is a middleman in distributing the goods.⁴³

Store, shop, or fixed place of dealing. There is some conflict with reference to the necessity of a person keeping a shop or store or having a fixed place of business in order to be considered a merchant. In the preceding subdivision it is stated that from the usual definitions given to the term it would seem that two essentials are necessary to constitute a person a merchant in the ordinary meaning of the word, and one of these essentials is that he must buy and sell. What is said to be the second essential is that he must keep a shop or store for that purpose.⁴⁴ Thus there is the view that a merchant must have a store, stand, or other place to keep and sell his goods,⁴⁵ and that the term ordinarily contemplates that the merchant is to have a fixed place of business⁴⁶ at which he usually sells his merchandise.⁴⁷ However, it is recognized that a merchant

On the other hand, it has been said that there is a class of merchants who have no fixed place of business from which they distribute their goods directly to their customers,⁴⁹ and a peddler, who is a merchant, does not have any fixed place of dealing, as stated in Hawkers and Peddlers § 1.

Wholesale or retail Formerly the term "merchant" was applied to wholesalers only, but this was with reference to the conduct of business in England and in the early days of this country.⁵⁰ In modern usage in this country the term is applicable to either a retailer⁵¹ or to a wholesaler.⁵²

Other elements The word "merchant" involves the idea of dealing with merchandise in some form or other,⁵³ of buying and selling exclusively articles which are the subject of ordinary commerce,⁵⁴ and it has been said that a merchant must be in the business of buying and selling commodities.⁵⁵ Thus one who buys and sells exclusively articles not the subject of ordinary commerce⁵⁶ or who sells only his skill⁵⁷ is not a merchant.

The term "merchant" is applicable to all persons who habitually trade in merchandise,⁵⁸ and, since a merchant buys and sells not incidentally or occasionally, but habitually, as a business,⁵⁹ one isolated sale does not constitute a man a merchant.⁶⁰

A merchant is one who sells to earn a profit,⁶¹ and one who buys and sells commercial articles on salary,⁶² and not for profit,⁶³ is not usually termed a "merchant."

In order to come within the scope of one of the accepted definitions of the term "merchant" it is necessary that the person "does not engage in the performance of any manual labor, except such as is necessary in the conduct of his business as such merchant," and it has been said that these words refer to the labor of opening boxes and bales, placing goods on shelves, waiting on customers, and doing such thing as are usual in the conduct of a mercantile business.⁶⁴ Any labor which goes further and converts the form of the article sold from its raw state into a finished product changes him, who otherwise would have been a merchant, into a manufacturer or an artisan, as stated in Manufactures § 1 b (2).

Inclusions and Exclusions. The term "merchant" embraces all who buy and sell any species of movable goods for gain or profit,⁶⁵ and many different things are dealt in by merchants.⁶⁶ However, the nature of the commodity handled does not necessarily determine whether a person is or is not a merchant, for the proprietor of a department store and the owner of a peanut stand are both consid-

"A tailor makes his profit out of the skill which he exhibits in the design and manufacture of clothing. The difference in value between raw materials in the shape of piece goods, thread, buttons, etc., and the manufactured suits, represents the labor, art, or skill of the tailor. It is that which represents his profit. A person who sells his skill is not a merchant. An artist buys canvas and paint and converts them into a picture. If he sells the picture for more than he paid for the canvas and the paint that does not make him a merchant, because the profit represents not any increased worth in the intrinsic value of the canvas, or the paint, but it represents, rather, the skill of the painter."—Charles Lob's Sons v Karnofsky, La App., 144 So 164, 167, 168

MERCHANTABLE. The term "merchantable" has many meanings,⁷⁷ and is difficult, if not impossible, of inflexible definition⁷⁸ It is a relative term,⁷⁹ to be defined in the light of the subject matter of the contract,⁸⁰ and its meaning depends on the conditions and circumstances surrounding each case,⁸¹ and also on whether the article to be dealt in is susceptible of a fixed and uniform standard or is of a variable nature⁸²

or quality of an article,⁸³ and it signifies ordinary quality⁸⁴ or medium quality of goodness,⁸⁵ indicating at least medium quality or goodness,⁸⁶ the word being well adapted to convey the idea of mediocrity in quality, or something just above that⁸⁷ In order that an article of commerce may be said to be merchantable it must be salable, and in order to be this it must possess an ordinary or medium quality of goodness.⁸⁸ The word "merchantable" therefore denotes salableness⁸⁹ or salability⁹⁰ of merchandise with regard to quality,⁹¹ and it may include the quality of being reasonably fit for the general purpose for which an article is manufactured and sold.⁹² In itself, and etymologically, the word "merchantable" has no necessary connection with quantity,⁹³ and as applied, for example, to the capacity of a machine it has no meaning⁹⁴

The term is variously defined as meaning salable⁹⁵ and fit for the market,⁹⁶ such as is generally⁹⁷

ality.⁴² It has also been defined as meaning to sink the identity or individuality of;⁴³ to cause to disappear,⁴⁴ to make to disappear in something else,⁴⁵ to cause to be absorbed or engrossed,⁴⁶ to swallow up.⁴⁷ It is frequently used with the words "in" or "into."⁴⁸

Nowhere in the various definitions of the word is an extinction suggested, but, rather a joining together, an addition, a combining of the qualities of one with another; not a death but rather a marriage.⁴⁹

"Merge" has been held to be synonymous with, or belonging to the same class as, "combine" see 15 C.J.S. p 241 note 64, and "incorporate" see 42 C.J.S. p 543 note 51 2

Merger

"Merger" is defined generally as the absorption of a thing of lesser importance by a greater, whereby the lesser ceases to exist, but the greater is not increased,⁵⁰ an absorption or swallowing up so as to involve a loss of identity and individuality.⁵¹

In law it is the absorption or extinguishment of one estate or contract in another.⁵² It is said that merger is an operation of law not depending on the intention of the parties.⁵³ However, it has also been stated that it is the law⁵⁴ that merger is largely a question of intention⁵⁵ to a great extent depending on the circumstances surrounding each particular case,⁵⁶ and it is said that the courts will always presume against it whenever it will operate to the disadvantage of a party.⁵⁷ In merger there is a carrying on of the substance of the thing, except that the substance is merged into, and becomes a part of, a separate thing with a new identity.⁵⁸

"Merger" has been held synonymous with, or equivalent to, "confusion" see 15 C.J.S. p 958 note 30, "consolidation" see 15 C.J.S. p 992 note 6, and "extinguishment" see 35 C.J.S. p 294 note 40.

"Merger" has been compared with, or distinguished from, "consolidation" see 15 C.J.S. p 992 note 6, "extinguishment" see 35 C.J.S. p 294 note 42, "surrender,"⁵⁹ and "union."⁶⁰

Merger of rights. Rights are said to be merged when the same person who is bound to pay is also entitled to receive.⁶¹ This is more properly called a confusion of rights or extinguishment.⁶² When there is confusion of rights and the debtor and creditor become the same person, there can be no right to be put in execution;⁶³ but there is an immediate merger.⁶⁴

"Merger," as that term is used in the common law, is said to be synonymous with "confusion" in the civil or Roman law see 15 C. J. S. p. 958 note 30, and, when used with reference to demands, indicates that, where the qualities of debtor and creditor become united in the same individual, there arises a confusion of rights, which extinguishes both qualities;⁶⁵ whence merger is often called "extinguishment,"⁶⁶ the terms "merger" and "extinguishment" being regarded as equivalents or synonymous see 35 C. J. S. p. 294 note 40.

Merger of prior and contemporaneous negotiations into a written instrument. It has been stated generally that all prior and contemporaneous negotiations are merged in a written instrument.⁶⁷ This rule is frequently applied to contracts see Contracts §§ 380-384, particular reference being made to § 381 where it is said that this is in effect a statement, in different form, of the rule excluding evidence of prior or contemporaneous oral agreements to contradict or to modify a written contract, which is treated in Evidence § 901.

For the discussion of the rule that all prior and contemporaneous negotiations are merged in the written instrument as applied to deeds see Deeds § 91 c; in connection with insurance policies see Insurance §§ 250 a, 266 b; and with reference to leases see Landlord and Tenant § 232 m. For reference to other applications of the rule consult the Descriptive-Word Index.

Merger of estates. The merger of estates is treated and discussed generally in Estates §§ 123-131. In connection with trusts, the merger of legal and equitable estates is treated in the C. J. S. title Trusts §§ 176, 203, also 65 C. J. p. 519 notes 34-38 and p. 567 note 58-p. 569 note 79. For other places throughout this work where the merger of estates is treated see the cross references in Estates § 123.

Merger of corporations. The merger of corporations is treated generally in Corporations §§ 1603-1637, and with reference to internal revenue provisions see the title index to the title Internal Revenue. For the treatment of the merger or consolidation of particular kinds of corporations see the cross references in Corporations § 1605.

Other particular applications. The merger of offenses is treated in Criminal Law § 10; the merger of judgments is discussed in Judgments §§ 561, 599. For reference to other particular mergers in addition to those set out in the preceding paragraphs consult the Descriptive-Word Index.

MERIT. The original significance of the Latin root of the word "merit" was to get a share,⁷³ and it has been said that the present meaning of "merit" is deserving well.⁷⁴

As a noun, the word is defined as meaning due reward or punishment;⁷⁵ the quality of deserving well or ill,⁷⁶ desert⁷⁷

As a verb, the word "merit" means to earn by service or performance,⁷⁸ to have a right to claim as a reward.⁷⁹

"Merit" has been distinguished from "fitness" see 36 C.J.S. p 884 note 41.

Merits

It is said that the word "merits" is not very clearly defined,⁸⁰ and, as a legal term, it has acquired no precise technical meaning, and so admits of some latitude of interpretation,⁸¹ but it is also said that it has a settled legal meaning.⁸²

If taken in its ordinary acceptance, the word "merits" would mean the abstract justice of the case,⁸³ without regard to any technical or arbitrary rules of law.⁸⁴ However, it has been said that a better definition would be to consider it as meaning the combined questions of law and fact presented by the pleadings of the case.⁸⁵

As a legal term, the word "merits" is to be regarded as referring to the strict legal rights of the parties, as contradistinguished from those mere questions of practice which every court regulates for itself, and from all matters which depend on the discretion or favor of the court,⁸⁶ and it implies a consideration of substance, not of form; of legal rights, not of mere defects of procedure or the technicalities thereof⁸⁷

As a technical legal term,⁸⁸ "merits" is defined as meaning the various elements which enter into or qualify the plaintiff's right to the relief sought,⁸⁹ matter of substance, as distinguished from matter of form⁹⁰ or technicality;⁹¹ the real or substantial grounds of action or defense, in contradistinction to some technical or collateral matter raised in the course of the suit,⁹² the real or substantial grounds of action or defense as distinguished from matters of practice, procedure, jurisdiction, or form,⁹³ the intrinsic rights and wrongs of a case as determined by matters of substance, in distinction from matters of form,⁹⁴ the strict legal rights of the parties, as distinguished from those depending on questions of practice, jurisdiction, competence, discretion, favor, or the like⁹⁵

ice may be made on the basis of demonstrated relative fitness, without regard to political considerations⁹⁸ Such a system would necessarily include a fair and impartial selection and appointment of all personnel on the basis of open and competitive merit examinations, specific reasons for removal, and a reasonable hearing⁹⁹ The purpose and effect of the merit system is to take from the appointing officer the right of arbitrary removal, either directly or indirectly, of an appointee which he otherwise would have.¹ The system is sometimes referred to as a "non-partisan merit system."² In the United States it is opposed to the "spoils system"³

The merit system is treated with respect to county officers and agents in Counties § 101 a.

Origin

"Merit systems in American government are of comparatively recent development. The federal government began about 1886 in a tentative way to make certain appointments based at least upon an effort to ascertain the ability of the appointee to perform properly the services of his position, rather than his contributions to the success of the party which happened to be in power, and this system has spread to a greater or less extent in all parts of the country, although it is by no means universal"—Taylor v McSwain, 95 P 2d 415, 421, 54 Ariz 295

MESIAL. A term which, when applied to a tooth, refers to the side of the tooth toward the center of the mouth ¹⁴

MESNALT or MESNALITY. A manor held under a superior lord; the estate of a mesne ¹⁵

MESNE. Intermediate; intervening, ¹⁶ the middle between two extremes ¹⁷

Mesne profits. An ancient technical term, ¹⁸ meaning intermediate profits; that is, profits which have been accruing between two given periods ¹⁹

The term is defined in Ejectment § 128, and is treated in connection with actions for damages for detention of dower in Dower § 78. The right to recover mesne profits in a writ of entry is discussed in Entry, Writ of § 24, and the action for mesne profits is treated in the CJS title Trespass § 120, also 63 C.J. p 1053 notes 21-27. For other particular applications and specific uses of the term consult the Descriptive-Word Index.

Other phrases, employing the word are set out in the note. ²⁰

MESNE, WRIT OF. An ancient and abolished writ, which lay when the lord paramount distrained on the tenant paravail. The latter had a writ of mesne against the mesne lord ²¹

MESON. In Spanish law, a hostelry. ²²

MESQUITE. An important leguminous tree, or often shrub, "prosopis juliflora," growing from Texas to southern California, and thence southward to Chile. ²³

MESSAGE. Any notice, word, or communication, written or oral, sent from one person to another ²⁴

The term is frequently used in the CJS title Telegraphs and Telephones, particular reference being made to § 106, also 62 C.J. p 127 notes 34, 35, where the word is discussed as used in statutes imposing penalties on telephone and telegraph companies for violation of their public duties.

MESSENGER. One who bears a message or an errand, the bearer of a verbal or written communication, notice, or invitation from one person to another or to a public body; an office servant. ²⁵

The term, by its fair import and significance, does not apply to a public officer acting in an original capacity in the discharge of duties imposed on him by law, but presupposes a superior in authority whose servant the messenger is and whose mandate he executes, not as a deputy, with power to discriminate and judge, or to bind his superior, but as a mere bearer and communicator of the will of his superior. ²⁶

MESSIS SEMENTEM SEQUITUR. See 40 C.J. p 653 note 5.

MESS PORK. A term which has a precise meaning in trade, and comprises only that pork which is taken from the sides of the hog, between the shoulder and hams, and no other part of the animal ²⁷

MESTIZO. A mongrel or person of mixed blood; sometimes used as equivalent to "octoroon," that is, the child of a white person and a quadroon, sometimes as denoting a person one of whose parents was a Spaniard and the other an American Indian.³⁶

METABOLISM. The sum of the processes concerned in the building up of protoplasm and its destruction incidental to the manifestation of vital phenomena,³⁷ the chemical changes proceeding continually in living cells.³⁸ It denotes the sum total of all processes of the human body by which food is transformed into chemicals and in turn absorbed into the blood stream and lymphatic system for the purpose of so nourishing the body that it can continue to function.³⁹ In other words, it is the aggregate of all processes whereby food is digested, heat and energy created, the body built up or repaired, and waste matter excreted.⁴⁰ Metabolism may be constructive or destructive.⁴¹

Rate of metabolism. The rate of metabolism is measured by the rate at which the body produces or gives off heat, and the "basal metabolic rate" is defined as the least rate of chemical activity which will maintain the absolutely essential functions of the body sufficiently to keep an individual alive.⁴²

(1) "Every activity of the body increases the amount of energy consumed. Having found the basal requirements of an individual, the physician can, by the addition of the demands of the individual's other activities, compute what his total needs will be. Average normal standard rates have been established by tests, and the results are expressed in terms of either plus or minus variations from the standard. In the same classification normal healthy people vary one from another in the normal basal metabolic rate. The great majority vary only to the extent of 10% more or 10% less in the amount of heat produced, represented by the average normal standard. Normal healthy people may vary from the average standard normal rate to even a greater extent, but seldom more than 15% more or less than standard, which means that the individual is consuming 15% more or 15% less energy than the average among normal people."—U. S. v 62 Packages, More or Less, of Marmola Prescription Tablets, D. C. W. 142 F. Supp. 878, 885.

(2) "By examination of the rates at which normal persons give off heat, scientists have established the normal rate of metabolism from which, experience has revealed, most persons deviate by not more than 10 per cent. To enjoy good health, one's body must maintain a proper balance of essential chemicals; the thyroid gland is the primary agency in achievement of this end."—*U. Further discussed

"Originally this class was regarded as including only these bodies together with certain alloys (as brass and bronze), and hence as definable by their common properties, viz, high specific gravity and density, fusibility, malleability, opacity, and a peculiar luster (known specifically as 'metallic') In process of time other substances were discovered to have most but not all of these properties, the class was thus gradually extended, the properties viewed as essential to its definition becoming fewer From the point of view of modern chemistry the 'metals' are a division (including by far the greater number) of the 'elements' or simple substances Among them are all the original (simple) 'metals', of the latter additions to the list some possess all the properties formerly viewed as characteristic of a metal, while others possess hardly any of them, the 'metallic luster' is perhaps the most constant By some chemists the radical ammonium (NH⁺) and derivatives thereof have been designated as 'metals' on account of the analogy of their compounds with those of the metals potassium and sodium"—U S v Wells, Fargo & Co, supra

MIDDLE. Of a member or part, equally distant, as reckoned by numbers, space, or other particular, from the extremes either of a number of things or of one thing; mean, medial.¹

Middle West The northern portion of the central United States and more specifically the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Iowa, Wisconsin, and Minnesota, the north central portion of the United States embracing approximately the area north of the Ohio River and its latitude from the Rocky Mountains to the Alleghenies.² It is the equivalent of "Mid-West" as stated ante p 1077 note 98.

Other phrases employing the word "middle" are set out in the note³

MIDDLEMAN. A person employed to bring two or more parties together;⁴ one who merely brings the parties together in order to enable them to make their own contracts;⁵ an agent who merely brings the parties to the sale together, and on whom does not devolve the duty of negotiating for either, and who may contract for and receive commissions from both.⁶ In order to be a mere middleman, the agent must not be invested with the least discretion, and the first employer must have no right to rely on obtaining the benefit of his judgment.⁷ A middleman is in no fiduciary relation to his principal⁸ and sustains no confidential relation to either party.⁹ He is the agent of both,¹⁰ and neither negotiates for, nor is employed to negotiate by, either side,¹¹ since the parties when they meet do their own negotiating and make their own bargains.¹² He is not under any obligation not to receive compensation from the opposite party to the transaction,¹³ but may contract for and receive a commission from both.¹⁴

The distinction between a middleman and an agent is treated in Agency § 2 a, and between a middleman and a broker in Brokers § 2. However, brokers may act as middlemen, as discussed in Brokers § 6.

A jobber is a sort of middleman, and this is particularly true in the gasoline industry as discussed in 48 C J S p 795 note 46, p 796 note 48.

§ 1. Definitions, Nature, and Distinctions

"Militia" may be defined as a body of citizen soldiers organized and trained for call to temporary military duty in time of emergency.

"Militia" has been defined as a body of men composed of citizens occupied ordinarily in the pursuits of civil life, but organized for discipline and drill, and called into the field for temporary military service when the exigencies of the country require it,¹ as that portion of the people who are capable of bearing arms, that is, the arms-bearing population,² and as citizen soldiers.³ The term is also defined as all persons by law liable to do duty in the militia,⁴ a body of citizens enrolled for military discipline,⁵ or troops furnished on call of the president by the state.⁶

Distinguished from other terms or organizations "Militia" as a term or an organization has been distinguished from "troops,"⁷ "standing army,"⁸ and "posse comitatus."⁹

Captain of militia is an officer commanding a company.¹⁰

"Quarter," as the term is used in connection with militia, has been said to be the usual term applied to stations, buildings, lodgings, and the like in the regular occupation of military troops.¹¹ "Quartering" has been defined in connection with militia as meaning, in the military sense, to shelter, or furnish with shelter or entertainment, to supply with lodging, especially, to assign to a certain place of shelter, as soldiers.¹²

§ 2. Power to Organize, Regulate, and Control Generally

The power to organize, regulate, and control the militia rests in the United States and the several states, although the power of the United States is paramount where it has been exercised to the exclusion of the individual states.

The Constitution of the United States provides in article 1 section 8, that congress may make provision "for organizing, aiming, and disciplining, the militia and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the states respectively, the appointment of the officers, and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by congress." There is authority for the view that the power over the militia so conferred on congress is restricted to the specific matters enumerated,¹³ and that the power of congress to provide for "governing" the militia may be exercised only when the militia is employed in the service of the United States.¹⁴

Federal legislation A valid federal statute enacted pursuant to the power given by the constitution is operative in the several states and binding on the civil and military officers of the state government, independent of, or notwithstanding, any state legislation on the subject.¹⁵ Provisions of federal law regulating the receipt, by persons convicted of crime, of arms or ammunition transported in interstate commerce do not affect the rights of the states.

to maintain their militia¹⁶ Under a statute authorizing the president to make all necessary rules and regulations for the organization and government of the militia, the acts of the secretary of war in issuing National Guard regulations are nonjudicial and are the acts of the president¹⁷

States The authority which a state may exercise over its own militia is not derived from the Constitution of the United States,¹⁸ and the reservation therein to the states of the power to appoint officers and the authority to train the militia is not regarded as an enumeration of all the powers which belong to the states¹⁹ Except with respect to the matters enumerated in the constitutional provision conferring authority on congress, and with respect to the power to raise armies conferred on congress,²⁰ the militia remains subject to the state authorities²¹

The federal Constitution does not, either directly or by implication, prevent all state legislation in respect of the militia,²² and by statutory and constitutional provisions various states have provided for the regulation of the militia²³ Such regulations have been upheld where conflict with valid federal regulation on the subject involved is avoided,²⁴ and where there has been a compliance with other requirements governing the validity of statutes,²⁵ but a statute regulating the militia which is violative of provisions of the state constitution is invalid²⁶

over the militia given to congress is not exclusive,²⁷ and in this respect there may be concurrent legislation by the states and by congress,²⁸ but the right of the state must yield to the superior right of congress acting within the limitations imposed by the Constitution²⁹

§ 3. Relation of Militia to Civil Government

The subordination of the military to the civil authority in times of peace is generally recognized under constitutional and statutory provisions for such subordination;³⁰ and, hence, it has been held that military aid to civil authorities when given by the militia must be within and in accordance with the civil law, as discussed infra § 21 Subject to such considerations, however, it has been held that the militia ordinarily is governed by laws relative to military affairs rather than by laws regulating civil matters.³¹ It has also been held that the civil courts ordinarily have no jurisdiction over, and hence cannot interfere with, the management of the military forces of the state³²

§ 4. Obligation to Render Military Service

Every citizen of sufficient age and capacity to bear arms is under obligation to render military service in the militia when lawfully required to do so.

Special and extraordinary duties

Under statute directing governor to issue such orders as may be necessary to conform National Guard to that prescribed by war department, the duty imposed on the governor is an "emergent special duty," and the fact that the duty imposed may be special and extraordinary does not render the statute invalid—State ex rel Charlton v French, supra

State of insurrection

Statute authorizing governor to call into service all or any part of active members of state guard and all or a portion of reserve forces when he has by proclamation declared a state of insurrection to exist is not unconstitutional as encroaching on constitutional power of governor to call forth the militia to execute the laws of the state, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions, since the act does not deprive the governor of any of his powers as commander-in-chief of the militia which includes the state guard—Marlin v. and capacity to do so, and when such service is lawfully required of him,³³ and a member of the militia renders services pursuant to an underlying duty which he constitutionally owes to support his government³⁴ The power to enforce this obligation, as far as the necessities of the state may require, is an incident of state sovereignty, and the subject of state constitutional and statutory regulation³⁵

§ 5. Exemptions from Service

Persons may be exempted from militia duty on grounds specified in state or federal statutes

Federal statutes relating to the militia have provided for the exemption of certain persons from militia duty,³⁶ such as those engaged in certain occupations or holding certain offices,³⁷ and early provisions contained an exemption in favor of persons exempt by the laws of the respective states or territories³⁸ Under various state statutes or constitutional provisions exemption has been accorded to persons engaged in certain occupations or holding certain offices,³⁹ and to those holding a religious belief opposed to war or the bearing of arms,⁴⁰ or suffering from physical disability⁴¹ In case of conflict between federal and state statutes with respect to exemptions, the federal statute will control⁴²

Where only the state authority is concerned, the legislature has power to revoke an exemption from serving in the militia granted to a certain class of persons and to require them to do military duty⁴³ Although it has been held that certain exemptions may not be waived by one who comes within the exempt class,⁴⁴ it has also been held that an exemption may be waived by a voluntary enlistment⁴⁵

Members of the militia may in certain cases be granted immunity from arrest

Under some constitutional or statutory provisions, members of the militia while on duty or while going to, or returning from, the place where they have been ordered to report for service may be accorded immunity from arrest in certain cases,⁴⁶ as from arrest on civil process⁴⁷ It has been held, however, that persons who are not members of the active militia may not claim the benefit of a statute providing for immunity from arrest,⁴⁸ and that the immunity may not be claimed unless the conditions contemplated by the statute actually exist⁴⁹ The right of members of military companies to exemption from jury service is considered in Juries § 153, and their exemption from service of civil process or prosecution of civil suits is discussed infra § 27.
